

Ghirardelli convenience helps in making Hot Chocolate to drink...too!

Perhaps you are one of the many who think of Ghirardelli's Ground Chocolate as primarily for use in baking and cooking... (If Ghirardelli convenience and Ghirardelli flavor have given you that idea—no wonder!)

But don't forget that "hot chocolate" is altogether a new beverage when you make it with Ghirardelli's.

No grating or melting is necessary—as you'll quickly see at the Cooking School—for any Ghirardelli use. And it has a flavor all its own!

Says WILLE ROGERS

BEVERLY HILLS.—Well all I know is just what I see and say. Brothers, I have seen something right here lately.

Couple of weeks ago I was prowling around. My wife and I, trying to scare up something new to see. We have bummed around over quite a mess of these United States and fragments of Europe, so just any little thing would make much of a dent on us. But we sure did run into something that knocked us back on our reserve supply of astonishment.

Its down in the South eastern part of New Mexico, at Carlsbad, a mighty pretty little town, a regular Oasis on what is sometimes almost a Desert. Its on the Pecos River, I was through the place years ago when they used to call it Eddy, and it was a good town even named Eddy, but its got some water there that will cure you of a lot of minor ailments. Course you got to go to Claremore, Oklahoma. Thats the place that will keep you right out of the obligatory column. But this old time Eddy will help you a lot. Well it don't look like a place that if a fellow was searching for another wonder to add to the World, he would head for. There is not much to give you any indication that you are prowling around over some of the most fantastic formations that were ever opened up to the gaze of man. Its just a rocky old hillside, not even too much grass. But its in a Cow Country, and many years ago the old Timers used to know it was there as the Bats would fly out of there by the thousands. Well any where a Bat comes fogging out of, no particular fair minded person is going to go prowling in the hole to see what made the Bat come out.

It wasent the finding of the hole it was the going inside and seeing why it was there, was the main thing. A Cowpuncher named White with more curiosity than any one I ever come in contact with, (for they are generally mighty leary of any hole in the ground) is supposed to really have been the one to go in there and discover that while there was Bats off in one end, in other parts there was the most unbelievable formations of water turned to stone. You really prowl around in there by well formed trails for over five miles. There is rooms in there with a ceiling of 400 feet. One tremendous room is almost a mile long. With all these marvelous formations of Stalactites, and Stalagmites. Thems big words, but I know what they mean now. One is like an icicle formed from the top by the water dripping, (thats the Tito one) and the Mite one is formed by the water falling on it and building it from the ground up. They hang like church steeples upside down. They form Totem poles and elephant ears.

Different rooms have different formations. Oh I aint got room to tell you in here what its like. I would have to be writing a book to do it properly. The Government has taken it over, and formed it like our other National Parks. Its mighty well handled, and you are splendidly conducted through it by a fine bunch of trained Park Rangers. Tom Boles is the General Supriendant, comes from Arkansas and knew my Wife years ago. She didnt see half of it for gossiping about some old "Nectors" back home. You walk down now, but they are putting in Elevators. And I made the first trip down in a Bucket, (as they got the hole cut through the day I was there). They bored from the top, and also from the bottom. Its seven hundred feet down, and they met in the middle, and the Engineers calculation was off a quarter of an inch. A Mr. Atwell, he was practically broken hearted to think he had failed so dismally. He is a fine Engineer and if this quarter of an inch dont ruin him some day might be President.

A Ranger named Carol Miller does a lot of the exploring, and he was itching to break away from us and go see if he couldnt find a part of the cave that would be worthwhile. You have lunch down there in a little ante-room five hours just leisurely time to see it. Every move of a few feet is an entirely different picture. So dont you miss this. You will all be coming to California to get in the Movies, so come by there. Good roads, and if it dont drag some adjectives out of you, why send me the Bill.

No one knows who wrote the "Arabian Nights." It is thought that the stories were derived by the Arabs from India, through Persia. They were first introduced into Europe at the beginning of the Eighteenth century, through the medium of the French translator, Antoine Galland. Lane was the first Englishman to translate them worthily. The present form dates from 1500.

Coolness in the Tropics

Cruising in tropical waters is made more enjoyable for the crew of a British tanker by artificial showers from a sprinkler system which cools the decks and cabins.

Influenza Plague Once Held Fashionable Cold

The word "influenza" came into vogue in English-speaking countries in 1890. The disease had been epidemic in St. Petersburg, 1889, and it spread over Europe and to England and the United States. In the following spring it was severe in India and Australia. In most of these countries it was known as "influenza," or "influenza," though in India "the grippes," a term used in the middle of the last century, was revived. The word "influenza" was given in Italy toward the middle of the Eighteenth century to an epidemic of febrile catarrh. It was in use in England as early as 1762. In that year Mrs. Montague, the "blue stocking," wrote: "Mr. Montague returned to London quite well, though he has been much pulled down by the fashionable cold called 'influenza.' A general epidemic of influenza took place toward the close of the world war, passing over western countries in three waves, the first appearing very suddenly in May and June, 1918, the second in September and October, declining in December and the third in March, 1919. Its origin was attributed by France to Spain, whence came its most frequently used designation of 'Spanish influenza.' Spain, in turn, attributed the outbreak to France and this continent though it started in eastern Europe. Virtually all the western nations were heavy sufferers. It was most virulent in the second wave—Montreal Family Herald.

Films Helped Police in Round-Up of Criminals

Since the films are still from time to time blamed for demoralizing the youth and thereby encouraging crime, it seems only fair that wide publicity should be given to a case where they have proved of important assistance to the police. Reuter reports that a Berlin producer wished to lend an air of verisimilitude to a scene of low life, hired a number of citizens of the Berlin underworld to "walk on" in the course of the production. The police got to hear of this, and also decided to call round at the studio and walk on, with the result that they presently walked off with several "wanted" men whom they found among the crowd of undeniably sinister supers.

The scene is a great tribute to the "realism" of the production; if the crooks were good enough for the police to arrest on sight they may truly have been said to carry conviction in their faces.—Manchester (England) Guardian.

Educational Problems

The woman who is determined to give her three-year-old daughter a proper foundation occasionally gets an unexpected set-back. When she heard the child say "Pot-ter" she took the child to task. "No, no," said the dutiful mother, "not 'pot-ter,' but 'p-o-t-a-t-o.' The little girl nodded. "And not to-ma-ter, but 't-o-m-a-t-o," added the conscientious mother. Again the little girl nodded. She understood. An hour later she rushed into the house.

"Guess what I'm eatin', mother." "I give up," replied her mother. "Banan-o," exclaimed the girl triumphantly.

Having laboriously cleared up this rather perplexing situation, mother pointed out to her daughter that to say "runnin'" and "swimmin'" and "walkin'" was just all wrong. She felt quite pleased at the child's aptitude, but was rather discouraged when her daughter told a neighbor that her doll's chair was "broking."—New York Sun.

Cows Have Passports

The boundary line along the Hungarian-Rumanian frontier, in effect since the World war, has been so arbitrarily drawn that frequently it separates a farming community from the fields where the farmers pasture their cattle, so each cow has to have a passport.

"The numbers of these bovine passports must correspond with the numbers burned on the animal's hoofs," writes E. Alexander Powell.

It is the duty of the frontier guards to see that a cow is turned back if its papers are not in order. Should a calf be born on the Rumanian side of the line its Hungarian owner could obtain possession of it, I assume, only by an appeal to the League of Nations!"

Tommy's Apple

When Tommy placed a rosy apple by the garden gate, and then secreted himself behind a hedge, he thought he had done so unobserved. But he was mistaken. An old gentleman approached him, and began to lecture.

"My boy," he said, "do you know that you are very wrong in placing that apple by the gate? Some poor boy might be tempted to purloin it."

"Well," said Thomas, "that's just what I want him to do."

"Why?" inquired old Curious.

"Why?" repeated Thomas. "Because I've hollowed out the inside and filled it with mustard."

Origin of Christmas Tree

The Scandinavians of North Europe worshipped trees in their pre-Christian days, the special deity of the Northmen being called "Ydrasil, or The Tree of Life."

Their Tree of Life was adopted by Christian England as an emblem of the Blessed Savior, and has been bestowing at the blessed season as a Christmas tree. In olden times it was placed on the roof screens, in the minstrel's gallery, or in the chambers of the churches.
