

To the Woman of the House

No need to be embarrassed through the lack of foresight on the part of friend husband in not leaving enough money for expenses of the day before he leaves for work or the office. Open a checking account in your own name, with definite amounts to be added at definite periods by the master of the house, and pay your bills by check.

Have you often wondered whether or not you have paid a bill twice, but did not wish to question the honesty of the one to whom the money was paid? Paying by check relieves all this doubt and makes long friends. You don't hesitate to show that a bill has been paid, if you have a check showing that it has been paid, or even have the check stub, and the person to whom the payment was made is not offended when a cancelled check proves him in error. Every housewife should have a checking account with this old reliable bank.

Talking Saved Her

Once there was a queen who was going to have her head chopped off at daylight. So what did she do but keep the king awake all night telling him the most interesting story, and when the sun began to peep over the hills the story seemed to be at the most exciting part.

The king had to get some sleep, and he didn't want to miss the story, so he postponed the execution until the next day.

Well, the queen got some sleep too, and that night she was all nice and refreshed, so she continued the story, and as day was breaking she had reached another exciting point in her narrative.

The execution was postponed again, and that thing went on for a thousand and one nights, and finally the king got to like the queen so well because of the interesting stories she told him that he wouldn't let her be executed.

Which goes to show—doesn't it?—that the plan used by the queen can save off calamity under certain conditions.

There is a close analogy between the predicament of the queen and that of the business which faces extinction, or even depression. Any legitimate business, selling a useful commodity or service, can employ words to curry favor and win prosperity.

The most successful and economical manner of multiplying words yet devised is the printed page. Decide today on the story most likely to interest your public, put it into earnest words, and our resources are at your service in broadcasting it.

THE FAIR.

There is at least one judge in Kansas City who knows his birds. First off they brought a blackbird into court on the charge of chicken stealing.

"What made you steal that chicken?" demanded the learned judge. "Was it because you were really hungry?"

"No, suhr," replied the blackbird. "Ah can't say as I was hungry. Ah done stole dat chicken fo' a lark."

"There is no resemblance whatever," snapped the judge and meted out a ten-day sentence with the advice that the ducky spend it reading a bird book.

"Witch" Elm Claims Victim

How the "witch" elm tree claimed another victim recently was told at the coroner's inquest at Port Talbot, Wales. Thomas J. Richards, thirty-six, had been engaged by the Penybont council to trim the branches. A branch on which he was standing snapped and he fell 40 feet to the road and was killed. A fireman previously had been killed while cutting away the branches of the same tree under similar circumstances. The tree, nearly 50 feet high, is known among woodsmen as "a traitor tree."

Those Good Old Days

It is the feeble and ill-nourished mind that shrinks from knowledge of what has been and suffers from pessimism's dream of what is yet to be. It is only the mentally and spiritually hampered—prophesying of evil to come—who believe that all change in our own day must be for the worse, and who long for the good old days of their grand parents.—Albert Shaw in Review's Reviews.

Whittier Manuscripts

The Essex institute at Salem, Mass., has acquired the Oak Knoll collection of manuscripts of John Greenleaf Whittier, the poet. The collection includes the contract which Tichnor & Fields made with Whittier for publication of his most famous work, "Snowbound." The publishers agreed to pay the poet ten cents on each copy sold, and it was estimated Whittier netted more than $10,000 under the contract.
