No Oil in Car
The wife of a Longwood man recently learned to operate their rather antique automobile. The man himself, to make his garage more clean, now that his wife would use it, placed an oldirp pan under the car. For two weeks he was gone on a business trip of such a flying nature that he used the train, leaving the care of the car to his wife.

Last evening he returned home, went to the garage and noted the pan had been removed from under the car. Upon going in the house, he asked friend wife. How come? Said the little woman (she feels pretty small now, anyway), "Oh, I guess the children moved it. Anyway, there isn't any oil in the car. I looked a couple of days ago, and thought when you came home you could put some in."—Springfield Union.

Glad She Was Fooled
After overhearing a remark by his father that the age of a tree may be estimated by the number of rings about its trunk, a small boy threw a scare at his mother's party. The boy looked confidently into the face of one of the guests, who was on the further side of forty and was fondling her necklace, and remarked, "Lady, I can tell how old you are." Amid frantic attempts at hushing he managed to get out: "You are twenty-two. I counted the number of rings on your necklace." The lady bugged the boy and the mother sighed her deep relief.

Fat Men Not Criminals
Fat men may not be regarded with approval by modern doctors, but one consolation in their preference on authorities, at any rate in Japan, look upon them with considerable respect and esteem. A medical officer at one Japanese jail has just received a diploma from the Imperial university for a thesis on the proposition that fat men are rarely criminals and the most crime committed by the lean and slender sort.—Manchester Guardian.
