Imposing State Capitol
The Nebraska state capitol at Lincoln is a notable innovation in American state edifices. It is a broad, low main building, 400 feet square, constructed around four courts. In the center rises an impressive square tower 400 feet high. The facade, with its setbacks, suggests that of the Pitt palace at Florence (1450); while the tower indicates modern German influence, recalling at the same time the turreted structure over the crossing in the older cathedral at Salamanca, Spain. Bertram Grosvenor Goodhue was the architect.

Orchids Need Much Care
Orchids, of which there are numerous varieties, are the most costly of cut flowers for good reason. It takes seven to eight years for the plant to reach the flowering stage, and in all that long period it must be cultivated under a uniform temperature and otherwise cared for, even after it begins its single bloom a year.

The sowing and incubation of the seed are done in the laboratory in flasks or test tubes, in which the seedlings germinate under sterilized conditions.

Curiosity From the Bog
Uncovering the bog at Rathfarnham, in the county of Dublin, Ireland, a curious bit of wood carving was brought to light which is perplexing the archeologists and scientists of Ireland and England. The specimen is evidently of great age, 500 years at least, and probably much more. It is about 3 feet in length and represents a woman, but the arms are missing, and it is the work of a skilled carver. There are some curious inscriptions upon it which are legible. The specimen has been placed on exhibition at the Dublin museum with the hope that some student may offer some explanation of the origin and use.

Pianos on Their Heads
Pianos and similar articles are moved in the city of Pernambuco by a sextette of trained men who are all of the same height and powerfully built. They will lift a grand piano on their heads and then march along with a soldier-like precision. A misstep on the part of one would mean disaster. As they pass along the street they are preceded by their chief who clears the way for them and gives the orders to the porters. All pianos are moved in this manner and these same men take care of all such jobs.

Slackers

CAN I Learn to Fly?

—By—
WILLIAM R. NELSON

The Correct Take-Off

MODERN airplanes appear to take off so easily, when an experienced pilot is at the controls, the maneuver seems simple. Just getting the plane into the air is easy, but there is a knack to it, the same as there is to shifting gears on an automobile.

"The secret of a good take-off is holding the plane in a straight line while running along the ground," my instructor began as we were about to start.

"Your rudder movement will have to be more pronounced on the ground because it has less effect there. We kick the rudder first one way, then the other, to hold to a straight course."

I opened the throttle and at the same time pushed the stick forward. As we started the tail came up to flying position, which brings the fuselage parallel to the ground.

As we picked up speed I was cautioned to let the stick come back slowly to neutral. It will do so of its own accord if not held forward. As it reached neutral we bounced slightly once or twice, then were in the air and climbing slowly.

"Keep the wings level. Kick the rudder pedals quickly if the nose swings away from your course. Try to aim at the red barn over there," came through the speaking tube.

Holding a straight course both on the ground and in the climb was more difficult than I had suspected. Just as I got the plane back on its course a wing would "drop," and in making the sidewise movement of the stick to bring it up I'd forget about the rudder and the nose of the plane would veer to one side or the other.

"You will notice you have to hold pressure on the right rudder pedal to keep your course," my instructor said. "That is necessary to offset torque caused by the propeller. Kick the rudder quickly and at the first sign of turning. If the nose starts to swing right, kick left rudder. But do it quickly and repeat it if necessary. Keep the wings level. Don't climb too rapidly."

We leveled out, made our turns about the pattern, and cut the motor to idling for the glide to land. He made the landing with me "following through" on the controls.
