REPARATIONS AND PROSPERITY.

This writer probably has as firm a belief as anyone that European nations should pay their war debts in full, and that this should apply to Germany with greater force than to any other nation. We can not forget that Germany's precipitation of the world war meant in human sacrifice, in just those things that we have to pay for. Those who do the paying are not the ones who started the war.

If we were a nation to ourselves we could stick firmly to this belief and demand the last pound of flesh, but unfortunately for such a program, to use an old expression, we are cutting off our noses to spite our faces. Whatever we force debtor nations to pay means that much less with which to purchase whatever we have to sell. The result is that in loss of trade we are actually ourselves paying whatever we demand European nations to pay our government.

It is easy to believe that if all war debts could be cancelled we should soon see a revival of trade that would surpass anything we have heretofore known.

Of course, that would be a bad precedent. Nations might go to war and borrow huge sums of money expecting their debts to be again cancelled.

Also relief from war debts would leave debtor nations in a position to much sooner finance another war.

But there may be a happy medium. There may be a way of holding these debts over these nations without being too severe in enforcing payment. That may be what President Hoover has in mind when he asks for a complete study of the war debt situation.

The question seems to be, "Do we prefer to force collection of our war debts and leave the depression stand or do we prefer to make some kind of arrangement that will make possible a resumption of world commerce that will bring prosperity?"

HOLMAN AND STATE AUTOS.

We wonder why the ever-watchful Julius left it for Treasurer Holman to unearth a scandal about state automobiles being used by officials in the transaction of private business or for pleasure purposes. The abuse of state-owned vehicles is nothing new. It has been going on ever since the state has owned automobiles. Various methods have been tried in an attempt to stop the abuse, but none of them have been completely successful.

This newspaper doesn't believe in being penurious as to use of state cars, and it knows that there are officials who conscientiously endeavor to stop abuse in their departments, but this writer has been at Salem too much to not know that it costs the state a great deal of money for official cars used for other things than state business.

And it is extremely difficult to draw the line. It often happens that state and private business are mixed on the same trip. The car goes on state business, but private business is transacted at the same time. An official has to make a trip down town from the capitol or to Portland. Is he going to have to make an affidavit of some kind before he takes a car assigned to his department? Many state employees have to make trips over the state. Shall a detective be sent along to see that no short pleasure trips are included at state expense?

It would cost more to ferret out the little abuses than would be saved. It is easy to be extravagant with state property and state funds. Besides, the conscientious official who tries to cut the little extravaganzas gets little or no credit for so doing, and it is easier to let his employees do what employees of other departments are doing.

But private business has the same troubles, and seems to have an equal amount of trouble in curbing the evil. When private business succeeds in having business cars used for business purposes only we may expect to see the state have equal success.

But anyway it's something to talk about and we wish Treasurer Holman the best of luck in his efforts. Maybe he'll learn something of benefit that he can give to private business.

An Oregon editor gives the depression credit for developing his sense of touch to a very high degree of perfection and efficiency. This editor says that the state of Oregon has become so thin that he can sit on a dime and tell which side is up, heads or tails, and if the depression lasts much longer, he will be able to tell the date on the dime—Mill City League.

We won't believe this yarn until someone lends us a dime so we can try the experiment for ourselves.

Oregon Voter speaks of Congressman Martin of Portland as a "respectable" democrat. Why the adjective? Sometimes we doubt the wisdom of democrats, but it never occurred to even such a dyed-in-the-wool republican newspaper as this that they were not as respectable as republicans.

The Eugene Register-Guard makes mention of the fact that maple leaves grow larger in Lane county than anywhere else in the world. Is there anything that doesn't grow larger here than anywhere else?

A Cottage Grove hen laid an egg eight inches long. She should be paraded before the other flocks in Lane county as an example of what can be done.—Springfield News.

The Lane County Medical society says that children do not inherit bad traits from their parents. What a relief that must be to grandparents of the kids of today.

There is no need to debate as to whether a thing is right or wrong. If there is room for argument there is not much chance of its being entirely right.

Somehow the things we would like to forget stick to us better than the things we would like to remember.

If some men spent as much trying to live as they do trying not to die they might accomplish something worth while.

ENGLISH AS SHE IS.

(Junction City Times.)

Commenting on an article headed "Do We Speak English?" which a number of papers, including the Times, have been expatiating on the Cottage Grove Sentinel, replying to the Brownsville Times, says: "The Times is treading on dangerous grammatical ground when it says that we must agree with the number of a collective subject. Here are three queries for the Times, suggested by recent items which have reached the desk of this writer: Would the Times say 'Ten feet of snow have fallen' or would it say 'Ten feet of snow has fallen'? Would the Times say 'A group of 32 students which went' or would it say 'A group of 32 students went'? Would the Times say 'The Smith family which' or would it say 'The Smith family who'?"

In the first question the Sentinel seems to think somebody's feet had been falling rather than snow. If snow fell it certainly has fallen. As to the second question we would say: "A group of students went." Telling the exact number does not affect the subject. A group certainly is collective and carries the singular verb. But if you don't like the sound of it that way, cut out the group. It doesn't signify anything, anyway. Then you can use the plural plural without being questioned.

As well say "This are the best bunch of cattle that ever came to town."

The trouble with grammar is it is hedged about with so many rules that even the experts don't know where they are at. Authorities usually say it depends upon how you mean it. Well, to our way of thinking the way you mean it has nothing to do with it. It is the way you say it.

Warriors Even Count With Drain. After trailing on the short end of the score for three-quarters of the game, the Cottage Warriors staged a rally in the final period and nosed out the Drain W. O. W. basketball team 22 to 21 in a game played Tuesday night on the high school floor. Tuesday night's win evened the count between the two teams, the Woodmen having defeated the Warriors 26 to 8 in a game Friday night at Drain.

At half time the visitors were leading 11 to 6 and at the end of the third quarter the Woodmen had boosted their lead to six points. Shofstall, Warrior center, and Whipple, Drain forward, were tied for high point honors with eight apiece. Shofstall looping in four field goals and Whipple annexing three field goals and two fouls.

The lineup for Tuesday's game follows:
Warriors: (22) Drain (21) Porter, 4 F. Mattoon, 5 Goff, 5 F. Whipple, 2 Shofstall, 8 C. B. Miller, 2 Hardisty, G. Bishop Glass, 2 G. S. Miller, 4 Bagley, 2 G. Coon, 2 Conner, 1 G. Bartholomew.

R. A. Team Loses to Eugene. In a fast game of basketball played last Friday night in Eugene the Royal Arcanum team lost to the Eugene Y. M. C. A. by a score of 33 to 22. The local team showed a decided improvement in playing over its previous games. The squad will be strengthened with new players for coming games.

Old Timer Kicks Cougar to Death

Grabs Varmint by the Tail and Saves Life of Fearless Dog.

(By JACK HOWARD.)

"Did I ever tell you about the time one of the old timers on the Mohawk grabbed a cougar by the tail and kicked him to death?" Joe Thrasher asked me the other day.

Joe was born about 45 years ago over in that part of the Willamette valley known locally as the west side. In addition to his chosen profession of engineer and millwright, he has had occasion to hunt not a little and to much, and so his stories of the chase and the trapline are not without interest. Joe arrived in the Mohawk country early enough to form the acquaintance of many of the old timers who were a hardy lot, fearless, resourceful, independent, upstanding citizens.

"Suppose you don't know old George Savage, old timer in the Mohawk country?"

"Great old hunter George was in his early days, and I guess that at different times he covered that whole country with his trap lines—had his cabins and hangouts all over the range. I guess he killed about as many bears, cats and cougars as any other man in that whole country. One day he told me this one:

"George had a neighbor, whose name I have forgotten, who induced George to go out with him to jump a cougar on which to try out a promising young varmint dog owned by the neighbor. George had done fresh cougar jumps and times no time until a big cat was jumped. The dog was game from the start and showed that cougar a good time, shoving him to the limit.

"Once in awhile you go up against a cougar that won't give, and if he does, especially if there is only one dog, will jump and make a getaway before the hunter can get close enough to plug him. This was one of that kind, only worse, for he bayed on the ground for a fight, and the dog went in. What that dog lacked in experience he made up in fearlessness. When the hunters arrived close enough to see what was going on, the cougar had taken a throat hold and the big cat had raked back and was proceeding to rip that dog to pieces. Old George said he never knew why he didn't shoot the cat off the dog as he was doing it, but he just didn't.

"When George's old neighbor saw his dog being torn to pieces, he developed about the same nerve and fearlessness as the dog. He let a yell out of him and he just grabbed the cougar by the tail and started kicking the daylight out of him, and in less than no time the cat lay stretched on the ground, gasping his last breath.

"That's what I call resourcefulness in an emergency, and some of those old timers had plenty of it. In this case it just whetted the old boys up for another emergency stunt. About a third of the entrails were hanging from the dog through a deep gash in his side. George said that dog was too game to die, so they packed him back to their camp, where they had a rusty old needle and a piece of common twine and, kneading the entrails back into place, closed the gaping wound. I have been told that the dog lived to be in many later kills."
