High School Notes

Miss Frances M. Wright, state supervisor of home economics, and Miss Jane Hinckley, state supervisor of the 11 western states in vocational home economics, addressed the girls' league in the assembly held Thursday morning. Miss Wright spoke of the home economics convention to be held in Minneapolis soon. Two girls will be chosen from here, she stated, to represent the economics department. Miss Wright introduced Miss Hinckley, who spoke on "Personal Appearance."

"I find girls are discussing personal appearance now more than anything else," Miss Hinckley said. "It doesn't take a lot of money to have good personal appearance," she declared, "if you have well chosen clothes and are well groomed."

To be well groomed, Miss Hinckley believes, is a matter of having these fundamental things: Clean necks and faces, correct posture, clean clothes and hair, clean feet, rest and the right kind of food; we have insured good health.

"A part of our home economics department today deals with clothing," she said, "and we are having to think of cost."

Miss Hinckley declared that those chosen for special and important positions or duty are selected for their initiative, self reliance and because they can really put things across.

"I think our young girls are facing things much better than they used to. This is an age of opportunity for you people. Don't say, 'I can't do it.' Take advantage of these opportunities as they come to you," concluded Miss Hinckley.

Dr. H. A. Hagen, senior class dad, complimented the class Thursday on its progress in the citizenship contest.

At a separate meeting of the senior girls it was decided to wear informal dresses for commencement.
