Footprints of Flowers By L. J. Taylor. The silent, invading armies of the sweet briar and the wild evergreen blackberries, that troop along the waysides and camp on sandbars and hillside to send new forces ahead of them; the California poppies, Marguerite daisies, godelias and French pinks, that flaunt themselves among the billowing acres of growing grain; all of these possess certain merits. All of them have been prized and cherished by someone. Yet they all teach in a most expounding way the need of our being careful as to what we plant in gardens. To the list above named we may add many others. One very modest little offender is the old fashioned short stemmed garden daisy, in both red and white. This demure little pioneer seemed to behave itself nicely in the gardens of our grandmothers, where it grew in prim borders. Escaping from desert homes or school yards it will build up solid carpets of no value as pasture, thriving in all kinds of weather, during all seasons. The choicest of the pioneer flower is not, as a room, left in the deserted gardens. Paeonies, tulips, irises, hyacinths and many others will not be left, while feverfew, ribbon grass, bouncing betsy, are among the ones left. So we find on deserted farms, footprints more interesting and more suggestive than the relics of firearms, etc., placed in museums. Grapevines planted before the Civil war, that are still bearing, can be found in alfolds. Old time fiddlers, the largest I ever saw, were blooming in great luxuriance on the donation claim of William Thackray 25 or more years after he was gone. The old custom of women wearing flowers in profusion has changed. The wearing of modern wigs would cause the sweetpeas, petunias and snapdragons of today to wither away in shame, yet, in the halls of memory, they outshine the modern flowers. At wedding and at church, commemorations and especially on Memorial day, the early timers made lavish use of the old time flowers. In Douglas county friends asked me to visit an old home site that was founded during the earliest period of Oregon history. The three of us stood, sort of spellbound, gazing at an almost vanished, crumbling chimney guarded by one old apple tree and one old vine wreath, commemorations and especially on Memorial day, the early timers made lavish use of the old time flowers. 80 PER CENT OF ROAD MONEY GOES TO LABOR Men Who Never See Highways Get Larger Part Than Those on Job At least 85 per cent and possibly more than 90 per cent of the money expended for a concrete pavement is ultimately paid out as wages and salaries, according to the bureau of public roads of the United States department of agriculture. This conclusion is reached as a result of studies of typical concrete construction jobs, and it is believed to be approximately true for other high-type pavements. Expenditures were traced back through various channels until the money went into personal use. About 15 per cent of the cost of concrete pavements is paid to men employed directly on construction jobs. About 12 per cent is paid to men employed in quarries, sand pits, mills and factories where the materials are produced and about 14 per cent is paid to men employed by the transportation companies (principally the railroads) for hauling these materials to the jobs. Part of the cost is paid to the men who build the machinery and equipment used in constructing highways. Even more is paid to the men who build the machinery and equipment used in sand pits, quarries, cement mills and steel mills where road materials are produced and to those who build the equipment of companies that deliver these materials. Some is paid to the miners, the men who work in the refineries and those who work on the pipe lines and in the oil fields—the industries which provide the fuel that produces the power used in producing materials, in transporting them and in working them into finished pavements. A part of the cost of high-type roads goes to those industries which furnish the supplies used all along the line. Some goes to the men who make blasting powder, some to the men who make hand tools and even the very minor items, such as cotton waste and the sheet of emery paper with which the mechanic grinds a joint on a machine he is repairing, absorb a bit of the cost as do the pavements are built. About 75 per cent of the cost of high-type pavement filters back through transportation companies and through industry to men who work for salaries and wages at points distant from where the highways are built. Most of these men are city workers employed by transportation companies or in mills and factories—men who may never see more than a few of the highways their efforts help to build but who, taken altogether, receive several times as much in salaries and wages as is paid to the men who are directly employed in building them.
