Turns right and left, and level flight, were next taught. By instructions through the speaking tube connected to my helmet and by "deaf and dumb" signals, my instructor told me what to do.

Rejoinder That Stung

Thomas Sparta, once Bishop of Rochester, in England, later became chaplain to the witty and profligate duke of Buckingham. It is related in Brand's "Observations on Popular Antiquities." At his first dinner with the duke, his grace, observing a goose opposite his chaplain, remarked that he wondered why it generally happened that geese were placed near the clergy.

"I cannot tell the reason," Sprat said, "but I shall never see a goose again, but I shall think of your grace."

Stoke Poges Old Home of Famous Penn Family

From the parish of Stoke Poges, England, whose manorial history runs to the Domesday book (1086 A. D.) and whose church history is fairly complete back to the year 1107, went not a few who helped to people the American Colonies; but the attachment they are most fond of bringing to the attention of Americans is through the Penn family.

The famous Quaker founder of Pennsylvania came from these parts, but is buried not in the Penn vault at Stoke Poges, but in the simple Quaker burying ground at "Jordans," six or seven miles away.

The Stoke Poges estate was bought by Thomas, son of William Penn, in 1700, and though for a time out of the hands of the family, the manor house is now owned by a descendant of William Penn in the female line. In the ancient church is not only the Penn vault and the Penn pew, but actually a private entrance to the church belonging to and used by the Penn family of old and today; somewhat in contrast to the Quaker simplicity of the distinguished ancestor.

Another tie with America is of more recent date. In Glendale, Calif., is the Little Church of the Flower, a replica of St. Giles' church (as that at Stoke Poges is properly entitled). Regular contributions are received from California for the upkeep and restoration of the little English edifice; and in return, the latter recently sent as a gift its ancient altar table.

Rules for Pharmacist Under "Bluff King Hal"

A prominent pharmacist and physician of Henry VIII's reign named Buleyn, who is said to have been a cousin of Anne Bolleyn, one of the king's numerous wives, laid down these rules for the practice of pharmacy, wrote Charles H. LaWall in "Four Thousand Years of Pharmacy":

"The apothecary must first serve God; foresee the end, be clean, and pity the poor. His place of dwelling and shop must be cleanly, to please the senses withal. His garden must be at hand with plenty of herbs, seeds, and roots. He must read Dioscorides. He must have his mortars, stills, pots, filters, glasses, boxes, clean and sweet (correct). He must have two places in his shop, one most clean for physic and the base place for chiburgic stuff. He is neither to increase nor diminish the physician's prescriptions. He is neither to buy nor sell rotten drugs. He must be able to open well a vein, for to help plenty. He is to meddle only in his own vocation, and to remember that his office is only to be the physician's cook."

Pilgrims Visit Mecca

About 200,000 pilgrims from all the Mohammedan countries visit Mecca every year at the pilgrimage season, said Eldon Rutter before the Manchester (England) Geographical society. But if any but a Moslem approached within 20 miles of Mecca at any time he did so at the risk of his life. No unbeliever, as such, had been to Mecca in the last 1,800 years. In spite of the risk several Europeans, by first learning the Moslem ritual and customs, had managed to get into the city in disguise and to come safely out again. On the other hand, a considerable number of unbelievers appeared to have got into Mecca and never come out again.

He Travels Without Noise

The mouse is the largest of our land mammals. His curious head with its large, odd nose, the broad, palmated antlers, and the pendant "bell" below the throat, all combine to make him seem like a story book animal. Because of his long legs he is taller than a horse, says Nature Magazine. Though large and heavy, he is able to travel most noiselessly through his northern home in the thickets of alder, birch, tamarack, along the edges of slow-moving streams and shallow lakes. He is fond of water-plants, leaf, stem and root.

LINDBERGH BABY IS FOUND DEAD

The body of a baby, which was identified by clothing and other marks as the Lindbergh baby, was found late this forenoon on the Lindbergh estate at Hopewell, N. J., according to news flashes from KGW, radio station of the Morning Oregonian in Portland. Radio messages were still coming in at the time this paper went to press.

The infant son of Charles A. and Anne Lindbergh was kidnapped more than two months ago and a nationwide search has been conducted since. Various clues had been followed and ransom money had been paid but the whereabouts of the baby remained a mystery.

Drunk Driver Is Fined.

Vartan Vartikian, driving a loaded truck with a California license, was arrested Thursday forenoon and fined $25 in the local police court on a reckless driving charge. John B. Reid of Eugene swore out the complaint. Both men were traveling south on Pacific highway when Reid was passed by the truck. Reid called the city police office and the arrest was made as the truck entered the city. No one was injured.

Seniors Observe Annual Sneak.

Sixty-five seniors motored to Belknap springs Wednesday for the annual "senior sneak." The group made a caravan and left the city at 6 a. m., accompanied by Miss Myrtle Kem, senior advisor, Mr. and Mrs. D. A. Emerson, Mr. Ira Seidler, Mrs. F. L. Grannis, Dr. H. A. Hagen, class dad, and Charles Beidler. The day was spent swimming, hiking, fishing and a number motored to the snow line and indulged in winter sports. They returned home in the late evening.
