State's Name a Mixture of French and Indian

It is surprising how many people, particularly in the Middle West, pronounce "Wisconsin" as if it were spelled "Wesconsin," with an "e" instead of "i" in the initial syllable, says Pathfinder Magazine. The name is correctly pronounced "Wis-kon-sin," and there is little in its history to account for or to justify the colloquial pronunciation. So far as known the first white man to set foot on any part of what is now the state of Wisconsin was Jean Nicolet, a courier de bois, who in 1634 was sent into that region by Champlain to make treaties with the Indians. He landed at Green Bay in 1633. In 1673 the region was traversed by Father Marquette and Joliet. At that time the river was known to the Indians by a name which sounded to the French like "wis-kon-sin," and the whites picked up the Indian name and applied it to the territory itself. In early literature dealing with Wisconsin the name is variously spelled "Wisconing," "Ousconsin," "Ouisconsin," and "Wiskonsan," etc., but in no case does the short "e" sound occur in the first syllable. However, in 1695 La Seur referred to the tribes along the Wisconsin river as the Ousconsinis, and this may be taken as circumstantial evidence that the name was even then pronounced "wis-kon-sin."

Strict Treasury Rules as to Damaged Money

There is no federal law forbidding the total destruction of coins by their owners. But there is a statute forbidding the mutilation or lightening of a coin in such a way that the original coin may later be circulated in its impaired condition. It is also illegal to deface a coin without removing any part of it.

Occasionally the ashes of burned money are identified by the Treasury department and redeemed at face value. But no relief is granted by the government to the owners of paper currency totally destroyed.

Three-fifths or more of a mutilated United States paper currency bill, note or certificate is redeemable at face value by the Treasury department. When less than three-fifths, but clearly more than two-fifths of the original bill remains, it is redeemable at one-half the face value of the original bill. Such fragments, however, must be accompanied by satisfactory evidence, as affidavits, subscribed and sworn to before a notary public, setting forth the cause and manner of destruction.

Zoo Specimens Come High

Lions are the lords of the jungle, but their value on the open market is often much less than that of other animals. A good gorilla usually is worth about $1,000, while lions have sold for even less than $200. And a gorilla is a risky purchase because the climate of most American cities is hard on the big apes. In the zoo market, the rhinoceros brings the highest price—$500 or more. Snakes are sold by the foot, some of the more interesting varieties selling at $15 a foot. Giraffes run the rhinos a close race in price. A pair of angelfish are snapped up at $100. Among birds, the little blue lovebirds are worth their weight in gold.—Popular Mechanics Magazine.

Gorilla Walks on All Fours

Contrary to popular belief, the gorilla walks on all fours, points out a writer in Boys' Life Magazine. "There have not been many gorillas brought out of Africa," says he, "and most of them have lived only a few months in captivity. Gorillas have only recently been brought to the attention of the world. The first gorilla in England arrived in 1837, and the first exhibited by the London Zoological society was received in 1855. On the other hand, an Indian rhinoceros was shown in Europe in 1513, a giraffe was sent to the emperor of Germany in 1559, and the first elephant in England was presented by the king of France to Henry III in 1255."

Post Office in the Home

Letter writers often find themselves without stamps when ready to mail their letters. One mother has solved this problem, according to the Parents' Magazine, by delegating one of the children in the household to act as postmaster. He is given a dollar's worth of stamps, and it is his business to see to it that stamps are always available. The various members of the family buy their stamps from him. This arrangement not only ensures a supply of stamps being in the house, but also provides the child with training in the handling of money and the keeping of accounts.

Ancient Water Organ

One of the strangest musical instruments, and which, by the way, plays an important part in the history of music, is the ancient water organ or hydraulic. The water organ was the musical instrument of ancient Alexandria and Rome. One of these old organs was discovered in making excavations for a new electric plant in the suburbs of Budapest, Hungary. Despite the fact that it had been buried for centuries it was in a good state of preservation.

Famous Englishmen's Wills

Wills have been filed in Somerset house, London, since 1382. Among them are the last testaments of Shakespeare, Milton, Admiral Nelson, the duke of Wellington (conqueror of Napoleon), William Pitt, Burke and Dr. Samuel Johnson. A fee of one shilling entitles any person to inspect any of these wills, with the exception of Shakespeare's for which the fee is two shillings.

Unearned Money

Unearned increment is the term applied to the extent to which the value of real property increases independent of any expenditure of labor or capital upon it by its possessor.

Statement

The County Office of Coroner is beneficial in a business way to an Undertaker. In this connection my friends, the Branstetter Chapel have held the office for 12 years. Now I am asking for the nomination for Coroner at the Primaries May 20, 1935.

I am connected in a business way with R. Claude Gray, Eugene, and P. J. Bartholomew, Springfield, and a favor in the way of voting for me will be a favor mutually beneficial to those associated with me.

If given the office I will endeavor to serve Lane County to the interest of the taxpayers, and will conduct the office in a business-like and economical way.

Been in the Undertaking business 20 years and am a taxpayer in Lane county. Have always registered a Republican.
