THE MEIER PROGRAM.
The first impression of those who read Governor Meier's program for tax control and tax revision is that his three proposals are worthy of support.

ENGLISH IN SCOTLAND.
The astounding difference in the way the two great English speaking nations use the English language is emphasized by recent comment in the Orcadian.

Radio Ray Has This to Say:
HOWDY FOLKS—We heard about a boy and girl who were spending their honeymoon at the seashore.

When will Cottage Grove wake up to the fact that the tourist crop is worth while? How about improving the appearance of the town?

local taxing units can be kept from spending their own money, or can be kept from issuing bonds when such taxing units can show that they are able to retire them, may be doubtful, but most of us are of the opinion that a kind of re-territorializing influence might be helpful. Nevertheless the state has no more moral right to tell a city what it may do with its money than the national government has to tell the state what it may do with the money, and we are wondering what would happen if congress understood to tell us how we should spend our automobile license receipts, how many bonds we should issue and for what.

Aside from that point, this writer can't help but sense the danger of a great political machine being built up by the governor, who would control all appointments in every county, every city, every school district. This might not be so bad were the governor a member of our party. Supporters of the present governor might be pleased to see him have the opportunity to build up such a machine, but there will be other governors who may think more of their own futures than of the welfare of the people. Such a governor would now grant to one who, most likely, would use such powers for the greatest good to the greatest number as he sees it.

This possibility is worthy of consideration. We must consider the future as well as the present, and Oregon has had governors to whom this writer would fear to great such powers.

Proposal No. 3 is in line with the sentiment of the Orcadian in every respect at least. It comes the nearest we have ever come to asking every person with an income to pay some tax. If income tax is provided, everyone should come under its provisions. The exemptions should be extremely low. We're pleased to see the tendency to make income tax applicable to all.

There is more to go than anyone realizes until he thoroughly reads it. Among other things it teaches us, "Never get the idea that you have a cinch; never give up until there is no longer anything that could happen to save you; when you're in the hole you're safe."

A scientist is authority for the statement that insects can be trained to do tricks. How long did it take him to discover that? Wives have always made insects do tricks.

"One of the Castle children has been ill with tonsillitis." "Ruth Shearer of Eugene visited (on) Sunday at the Harry Shearer home."

"Agnes McNew and Mary Trent were confined to the house last week with an attack of measles." "Cecil Geer is building a porch in front of his house."

The ordinary person in America has little idea of what is meant by "the smalls" as used by the Orcadian, which seems to be a designation for classified advertisements, or, as more popularly known in the United States, "wantads." The Orcadian is in error in believing the term "wanted" to be American humor. (We don't use that extra "u" in our "humor.") If an American reader of an American newspaper should see several columns headed "Intimations," that reader would be likely to believe that all the divorce scandals had been bunched under a label head. No American reader of an American newspaper would have any idea that a great department store was using that term to intimate that it had goods to which it wished to draw the attention of readers.

Incidentally it may be mentioned that the Glen Smith baby item, to which the Orcadian refers, caused considerable comment in Cottage Grove, for the reason that the city (not town) has two men by the same name, and the baby was born to the one least known.

The Orcadian should have called attention to the fact that words appearing in parentheses are words inserted by the writer to indicate that they should have appeared in the items as originally printed in The Sentinel. The Orcadian, being published where the English language originated, and where it probably still is used in its original form, probably doesn't realize that omission of redundant words adds to the crispness of American English.

during Feeling Market Week." Not an illustration appears in the advertisement. While an American department store ad would scream its bargain to the world the English way, which may be a better one, is merely to "give customers an opportunity to purchase." A "customer" in this country is one who buys regularly, so the pressure on Scottish merchant, who offers bargains to customers, doesn't care to sell to those who do not regularly patronize his establishment.

The Kirkwall way may be better than ours—that we have said has been intended as kindly criticism—but the Kirkwall way certainly is different from ours and certainly would not last five minutes in Cottage Grove.

A recent news story shows that farm prices are about 50 per cent of what they were a few years ago. The same story also shows that factory prices are about 50 per cent of what they were at the time used for comparison on farm products. The two facts show that we can not have prosperity on the farms unless we have prosperity in the industries, so that the industrial east is cutting off its nose when it refuses ample protection to agriculture, while agriculture is in error when it would refuse protection to the industries that must keep the culture to prosper.

After a feast, natives of the South Sea island drink a concoction which puts them to sleep. Over here we use after-dinner speakers.
