Cork legs are never made of cork. American people must pay thirteen and one-third billion dollars on mortgages falling due in 1932.

Each generation of India has 3,200,000 deaths caused by childbirth.

"Cork legs" are so named because makers of such articles originally lived on Cork street, Piccadilly.

Early Christian Burial
 Custom Not Understood

Strange burial customs of the early Christians were discovered by the University of Pennsylvania museum expedition during its third season of excavation at Mejdum, Egypt.

"In the vaulted chamber of a burial of the Christian period," a report from Alan Rowe, field director of the expedition, said, "many of the Christian bodies were buried in very bright garments and some of them had small pieces of sheepskin piled over their faces to a height of almost 20 inches. The significance of this custom is not known to us."

One of the most important discoveries of the excavators was a limestone slab bearing the only known contemporary portrait of King Seneferu to be found in Egypt. Seneferu was an Egyptian ruler who lived about 5,000 years ago and who was responsible for the building of the great pyramid at Mejdum.

Carved in relief, it depicts the king wearing a close-fitting cap, above which are the horns of a ram supporting two curved plumes.

"Elephant Test" Never Fails Bridge Builders

An elephant recently took part in a novel test of strength of the pressed steel which is the latest material used for motor car bodies.

The elephant, for all his vast bulk and weight, is a most discerning animal. The adult realizes he is heavy and knows instinctively what will bear his weight. Indeed, in countries where elephants are used as a means of transport, the natives on completing a bridge will try to persuade one to sit on it. If he refuses, the bridge is strengthened until he consents. Accordingly, at a pressed steel company's works a platform was fixed on top of a car fitted with a body of one-piece construction, and a five-ton elephant was invited to step on it from a warehouse floor at the same level. The huge beast never hesitated, and the body stood the test with ease.

Beethoven Anecdote

The Royal Philharmonic society—founded in 1813 and still flourishing as probably the most exclusive and distinguished musical organization in the world—has a proud memory or two in respect of Beethoven. For one thing, it commissioned him, in 1822, to write a symphony. He thereupon wrote the immortal Ninth "Choral" symphony, one of the most wonderful of all his works. The original score, in Beethoven's writing, is now in the British museum. And further, the Philharmonic society's gift of $500 to him when he was on his deathbed was of such value to him that his letter of thanks to the society expresses his deepest gratitude for it and promises in return—a Tenth symphony! That alas! was never to be written.

Great Appetites

Fondness for pickles seems to have been a characteristic of famous personages as well as of ordinary mortals. Both ancient peoples were especially fond of pickles, and historical records from antiquity down to modern times tell us that Cleopatra, Tiberius, Julius Caesar, Napoleon, and our own Washington and Jefferson were among the world celebrities who liked the familiar appetizers that we moderns know so well.

The cucumber, most popular form of pickle, is one of mankind's oldest foods, and was first cultivated in northern India 3,000 years before Christ.
