SETTLE REPARATIONS. The Sentinel can not help but feel that in whatever adjustment is made in war debts Germany is going to get the best of the deal.

If we feel that we can hardly bear our burden, if we feel that another straw would break our backs, what must be the situation in countries not as wealthy as we are, not as able as we are to pay heavy taxes and yet loaded with debts much greater than ours.

We feel that our own prosperity is dependent upon world prosperity. We can not have world prosperity unless the nations of the world can be shown some way in which they can struggle from under their burdens of debt.

This writer would like to see Germany pay every cent demanded of it, even though those who would pay it may be in no way to blame for the world struggle that created the debt, but we are more interested in our own welfare, in the prosperity of the world than we are in revenge.

When we see the suffering of millions of unemployed in our own country we feel that the United States ought easily to agree to any form of debt settlement that is satisfactory to the other countries that suffered more than we and have greater reason to put revenge ahead of their own financial welfare.

The talks are set for a settlement of war debts to start a return to a prosperity such as we have known in years that are gone.

STEALING THE PETITIONS. To one who is not directly interested, the story coming out of Portland of the stealing of the petitions that would put on the ballot the proposal to put skids under the institutions of higher learning is a highly fantastic piece of news.

To an innocent bystander the whole thing looks like a dastardly attempt to spatter with vile mud those who are making a noble fight to save the state's great educational institutions. The inference is, of course, that those interested in maintaining the university and normal schools at their present locations had a hand in stealing the petitions just before the expiration of time for filing.

If The Sentinel were to make a guess it would guess that the petition shavers found that they couldn't get the required number of names and that they determined to drag down in the mire with them those whom they could not defeat by fair means.

The Sentinel has been free to offer criticism of the state's institutions, but that criticism has been for the purpose of bettering and saving the institutions. Others have made the same kind of criticism, but not one of these persons has any sympathy with dastardly attempts to besmirch the character of any one of the institutions or to besmirch the characters of those who are honestly and sincerely fighting for their institutions.

It may take a dirty deal such as this to arouse the state to a realization of what is behind this move that is so shady that its sponsors do not dare make their names public. It may take a deal such as this to arouse the citizenry of the state to battle for institutions that have been built with millions of state money and by men who have given the best that was in them to erect institutions of which we and posterity might be proud.

It is time to don our armor and give battle to those who would stab in the dark, who would destroy with poison gas that which they can not destroy in fair conflict.

QUARTERLY LICENSES. The Sentinel heartily endorses any reasonable plan that may be worked out by the board of control to provide for payment of quarterly licenses on automobiles. While this would cause pain four times during the year instead of once, the present emergency seems to make such a plan advisable, even though it may not be legal and may get state officials into difficulties. Certainly it will make a mess of things in enforcing license payments and will greatly increase expenses of the motor vehicle registration department, there seems no doubt that there are many who need their cars in order to hold their jobs, while unable to pay the full license fee now, and state officials are more likely to be commended than criticized for overstepping the letter of the law to show sympathetic attitude toward those financially distressed.

There should be one condition. Those to whom quarterly payments are granted should present some evidence from a home official to show that granting the favor is warranted because of financial embarrassment and need of the motor vehicle.

A young swain, after receiving a very decided rejection from his sweetheart, sent her a statement for $371.63 for flowers, candy and opera tickets. If he can't do any more cooing he seems determined to keep up the billing.

Be as quick to praise on circumstantial evidence as you are to condemn, and things will be pretty well equalized.
