AUTO REGISTRATION FEES.
The difficult position the state was in regarding automobile licenses was illustrated by the grand rush made to get new plates when it was definitely decided by Governor Meier that the moratorium would not be extended beyond August 1.

Those who could have paid just as easily July 1 as August 1 held back their money on account of the moratorium that was for those who couldn't pay.

The extension to August 1 accomplished little good except to get gasoline tax from those who ran their cars another month before putting them into storage. It was just as difficult for most of those who purchased tags on August 1 as it would have been for them to have purchased July 1.

The Sentinel still believes that a quarterly payment plan could have been arranged, probably at a slightly higher cost than for payment in full, but that is neither here nor there now. It is probable that by the time the next legislature meets conditions will have so improved that the need for quarterly payments will not be apparent, but it is almost certain that there will be another reduction in the cost of licenses and that another cent will be added to gas.

One thing has been overlooked in all this discussion of motor vehicle licenses. The extension of time given motorists was not as long as some extensions granted during the peak of prosperity, and during our greatest prosperity there seemed to be almost as many as now who said they were unable to purchase promptly. During the hardest times we have had, motorists have had to dig up their license fees within a shorter time than during some years of prosperity.

Here's hoping it will be much easier to dig up next year, and that the fee will be less.

GIVE US A CHANCELLOR.
One thing upon which the people of Oregon are pretty well agreed is that they want the chancellor that has been promised for the institutions of higher learning.

A famous statesman and orator once said, "Give me liberty or give me death." The people of Oregon might well say, "Give us a chancellor or our schools will die."

If it's to be Prexy Kerr of Corvallis, let's have him elected and have it over with. If it is to be someone else, let him be named so we can stop all this feeling between the two camps that has resulted from the attempt to have President Kerr named.

Time for opening our schools is approaching and here we have no head to get things started. Our institutions of higher learning are in the worst fumble they have ever been. Even the proposal to move the university to Corvallis is hardly less destructive than this business of keeping the state in suspense as to a chancellor and keeping the schools from getting ready for business.

RAILROADS NOT DOOMED.
Many of us often wonder whether the railroads are doomed, whether they are to fall under the wheels of the ever increasing motor traffic.

A recent statement by Professor William Z. Ripley (not the Believe It or Not Ripley) that over six million five-ton trucks would be required to move the traffic now handled by the railroads. Imagine our highways cluttered with such a stupendous number of passenger and freight carrying motor vehicles. The thing is impossible without the spending of billions and billions of dollars for highways.

Professor Ripley points out that such a fleet of trucks would make a procession ten trucks wide reaching from Cottage Grove to New York.

The railroads are bound to remain the greatest vital factor in our transportation system.

A judge says married women do not own their own clothes. We'd be willing to take a chance that he's wrong, but we can't make any statements around his own home.

Some men will work just as hard trying not to lose over half their salaries in a poker game as their wives will to make the other half pay the bills.

The reason we speak of our rich men leaving so many "cool" millions is because they used the freezing-out process in acquiring them.

A person who tells you a secret that someone else has told him can hardly be expected to keep yours.

The writer of epithets is one author who never criticizes.

KEM CRITICIZES.
Cottage Grove, July 31.—(To the Editor.)—My letter appearing in the Sentinel of the 29th was not intended for publication but, as you seemed to think it worthy of public notice, I am entirely agreeable. However, for two or three reasons, I am impelled to ask permission to criticize your reply.

When I ask you to give the taxpayers more specific information as to the expenditure of this proposed $150,000 loan, you inform me that I must go to the mayor to get it. My first thought is, have I been deluded all my life in believing that the purpose and duty of a city paper is to give to its readers all of the information available about matters of interest and importance to them, and especially of matters of so great importance as taxation is at this time? It would seem, Mr. Editor, that when you tell me to go get this information myself, you haven't as high a conception of your duty to your readers as I have believed you had, and that I really have been laboring under a delusion. I hope I am wrong.

Again, my sympathy for our mayor inclines me to protest this method of obtaining information of a public nature. Have you no humane consideration for the feelings, ability and fortitude of our mayor? Suppose that everyone of the hundreds of taxpayers of our city, whom I infer are as much interested in taxation as I am, were to follow your advice and call upon the mayor personally for this information, don't you know that before he got half through explaining he would be in a blue funk and sweating blood from every pore? I quite agree with you, Mr. Editor, that furnishing employment for the needy is of greater importance than reconstructing the pipe line, especially when it doesn't need it. Do you want to put the mayor in the ridiculous, absurd and, yes, cruel attitude of punishing innocent men by compelling them to do the hard, dirty and disagreeable work necessary to reconstructing the pipe line? When, as you say, there is nothing the matter with it, in order to get something to eat? Why not allow them to play golf, yankee doodle, dance the tango or engage in any other pleasant pastime? It would cost the taxpayers no more and would be of exactly the same benefit as reconstructing the water system when it is in Al condition. O. M. KEM.

Fine Ships in Days of American Naval Glory

American history often speaks of Joshua Humphreys as the designer and builder of the Constitution, the Constellation, the Congress, the President and the United States, which were the greatest ships of their day. The United States was built at his own private yard in Philadelphia. The others were built from his designs and under his supervision in the different yards he was commissioned by congress to choose for such work.

To show what Joshua Humphreys himself thought, there is still a letter in existence addressed to Josiah Barker, naval constructor at the Charlestown navy yard, Boston, Mass., thanking him for a cane made from some timber taken from the Constitution when first repaired at Boston. He says, in thanking Barker: "This cane is of double value to me on account of it having been taken from one of the frigates I constructed in the year 1794, forty-two years ago, under the administration of the ever memorable Washington and General Knox, then his secretary of war. The five frigates, the United States, the President, the Constellation, the Constitution and the Congress were all built by drafts and moulds sent on by me to the different posts where they were to be built." It was the famous Nelson who remarked of these ships, at a later time, "There is in these transatlantic ships a nucleus of trouble for the navy of Great Britain."

Historic Mount Vernon Noted for Hospitality

In a day when every true son of the Old Dominion prided himself on being a genial guest and a generous host, General Washington of Mount Vernon was famed for his hospitality, not only in Virginia but throughout the length and breadth of the Atlantic seaboard. Morris from Philadelphia and New York met Adams from Boston, Carrolls from Carrollton and Byrds and Carters from the James at his table, and often a visiting Frenchman or two.

Humble visitors, too, were always assured a welcome at Mount Vernon. The rule was that none was allowed to go away hungry. Washington himself once described his home as "a well resorted tavern," and in a letter from Mount Vernon after his second term as President he wrote: "Mrs. Washington and myself will do what I believe has not been done within the last 20 years by us—that is, sit down to dinner by ourselves."

That Word "Celt"

Appropos of a controversy on the pronunciation of the word Celt, a correspondent writes to the London Daily Telegraph: "None of your correspondents has pointed out that the Celts who were originally a race spread over western Europe, were known to the Greeks as Keltoi. The Latins called them Celtae. But there being no 'k' in the Latin alphabet, the 'c' had nevertheless the pronunciation of that letter. Most people will, I expect, continue to speak of Kelts. I might add that 'c' is a superfluous letter in the English alphabet, having no sound of its own, but borrowing its sound from 'k' or 'g' as the case may be. It might as a letter be dropped out altogether without much loss."

Moa's Egg Found

A moa's egg has been presented to the Alexander museum in Wangnui, New Zealand. This rare find was made by a party of men who were working on a cliff-face of shellrock on Tokomaru West road. A hollow in the rock was uncovered by blasting operations and lying in it was the egg. Unfortunately a workman broke it with his shovel, but an expert skillfully repaired the smashed portions, and the breaks are not noticeable. It is stated that there are not more than ten moa's eggs in existence. The moa was a dinosaur-like bird having enormous legs and three toes. Its wings were obsolete. Some were 10 or 12 feet high.

Ancient Tales and Towers

In Somersetshire, about 25 miles from Bath, in Glastonbury, is where, legend states, was built nearly 1,900 years ago, England's first Christian church. It is claimed, also, that St. Patrick was born here and came back to die after his famous missionary activities in Ireland. Here, also, Joseph of Arimathea came with the Holy Grail, planting his staff on the hill, where it grew into the famous Glastonbury thorn, which blossoms at Christmas time every year. It is a delightful region for those who love ancient tales, ancient towns and ancient moorlands.—London Mail.

Fabulous Birds of Old

Mostly portents of good luck are birds of fantasy and fable, bringing joy to those they favor. More ferocious is the griffin, with its bird head and lion body. This weird animal with its dual personality was reputed to punish greed by leaping on despoilers of the earth's riches and tearing the offenders to pieces. In Asia, the griffin prowled and hovered over deposits of gold and precious stones, guarding them from adventuring caravans trekking the wilds to fill capacious saddle-bags with riches.

100 Degrees Expected.

The temperature Thursday was the highest it has been this summer. At 2 o'clock it had reached 96 and was gradually climbing. Wednesday 94 degrees was the high point.

Center of "Cold Pole"

The lowest temperature on the earth occurs in winter in the northern part of Siberia, the somewhat indefinite center of greatest cold, being known as the "cold pole." At Verkhoyansk, in this region, a temperature of 90.4 degrees below Zero Fahrenheit, was recorded on January 15, 1885, the lowest ever recorded near the ground at a regular meteorological station.
