Mexican Art Treasures

Among World's Richest If the rare paintings and other art treasures that are in the churches of Mexico or have been placed in hiding to prevent theft or destruction were gathered into one collection, they would astonish the world, declared Jose Sepulveda, an artist of Madrid, who has been making a study of these relics. He pointed out that the Catholic church was very rich in the Seventeenth century and amply able to send works of art of great value to Mexico and other colonies. It was also the period when art flourished at its best in Spain—when Murillo lived and Seville was a great art center.

From about the year 1600 there lived in Mexico for 40 years two artists who were skilled copyists and imitators. These were Baltasar Echave de his wife, known as La Suave. They painted in both the Italian and Dutch styles and Echave often imitated Titian fairly well.

Other Spanish artists who emigrated to this country and lived and painted here throughout the Seventeenth century established what is known as the old Mexican school and left many good works—many so good that it is not easy to establish their identity and distinguish them from the Old world work.

Stinkwood Tree Source of Much-Prized Lumber In a forest of South Africa there grows a tree with a hard fine wood but a very ugly name.

Stinkwood it was called by the early Dutch settlers, who made wagons from it, and later found that a stinkwood log was so hard that it would burn for three days. Now we make furniture of it.

Unfortunately the number of these trees will not last for many more years, for every time a stinkwood tree is cut down two or three hundred years must pass before another can take its place.

It seems, too, that there is no stinkwood in any other part of the world, though the tree is thought not to have belonged originally to South Africa, as the natives have no name for it. In cases of this sort it is usually found that the tree has been brought from some other country, but if this is so the place from which the stinkwood really came is still a mystery.

Correcting Uncle John

Uncle John was explaining to his little niece the mysteries of bird migration. He described how the swallows and martins come from far-off lands in early summer, and return to warmer climates when autumn comes along.

Little Phyllis was very interested. "Do all the birds go away?" she asked.

"No, dear," replied uncle. "Only a few of them."

"Does the robin go?"

"No, dear," answered uncle. "The robin just gets himself a new red waistcoat and stays."

There was a long pause, and then Phyllis said, thoughtfully: "I don't think that's right, Uncle John. I've seen heaps of robins wearing red waistcoats, but never one with stays!"—Boston Globe.

Truncheon Only Weapon

A wooden truncheon, or staff, made of cocus wood, 15 inches long, with a leather strap to secure it to the wrist, is the traditional weapon of the metropolitan police force of London. Revolvers are kept only at the stations, to be issued in special cases where there is reason to believe that encounters with armed criminals are likely to occur. Mounted police have longer truncheons. The metropolitan police orders provide that truncheons are to be used only in extreme cases, and whenever used by a constable must be submitted to the station officer for subsequent inspection.
