POETRY AND PAIN.

A few days ago a young woman whose life had scarce begun lay on a bed of pain awaiting the end that meant the beginning of whatever lies in the great beyond.

For many months she probably realized that soon she must leave those she loved, loved ones who felt they could not selfishly wish that her suffering here be lengthened in order that she might be with them longer.

Most of us in a like condition, most of us who have passed twice the age alotted to this young woman, would have felt that the world was cruel indeed.

But during many of the months of pain, of which she probably did not complain as much as most of us would about some minor ailment, this young woman's thoughts turned to verse in which were expressed a philosophy that might well have come from one enjoying all the happiness that should come to a young person, that might well have come from one enjoying robust health, with a prospect of many years of joy before her.

Now she is gone, but a few days ago this writer copied from her book of verse the following, dated November 23, 1932:

"I tried—and failed,
And with the failing thought
That life was cruel to me;
Forgot the times I'd fought
And gained the victory.

"I tried and won
And in the winning found
Life bountiful and free;
The pain of failure bound
In winning's ecstacy."

"And a little child shall lead them." In these two verses Katheryn pictured in a few well chosen words one of the most common of human weaknesses. In failure we are disheartened and downcast. If we are successful, life flows along like a song. And these words were written by one who at the time had little hope for the thing which most of us hold most dear, life with all its failure and victories. May we express the hope that she who wrote the verses is now enjoying that winning's victory of which she wrote.

CHAIN LETTERS.

An unusual number of complaints have been made at the local postoffice recently of the receipt of chain letters. All such letters command the recipient, if he would avoid terrible retribution, to write a similar letter to ten or some other number of frends, each of these to write similar letters to the same number of friends, and so on indefinitely.

It has never been recorded that any great joy ever came to anyone from keeping the chain intact, nor that any injury ever came to anyone who broke the chain.

If each recipient were to do as commanded, and the chain were never broken, postal receipts probably would be doubled within a year's time and the doubling would continue each year until the sum would be incomprehensible.

This writer once received a letter commanding him to send 10 cents to the treasurer of some organization that proposed to finance a church edifice by this method. This writer was also to write letters to three friends commanding them to each send a dime, each of them also to make the same demand upon three friends, and so on indefinitely. This writer estimated that by this method within a year or two a sum could be collected that would approximate the entire wealth of the country, so he broke the chain. That was when he was a kid, and that may be why he has just had to undergo a major operation.

As every chain letter finally wears itself out, it is easy to believe that a large portion of the population of the country would be wiped out if there were any efficacy in the curse cast upon those who break the chain.

It seems, however, that the object of no chain letter is so fatuous, so silly, so ridiculous but what men and women of intelligence and prominence fear to break the chain. The fact that postal authorities prohibit mailing of such letters should give such persons backbone enough to enable them to defy whatever the terrible thing is that may happen if the chain is broken.

Our good friend, Walter W. R. May, has been demoted from associate editor of the Oregonian to the position of manager of the Portland chamber of commerce, which reminds us of that old country newspaper expression that was always used to wish well some prominent preacher, business man or horse wrangler who was moving to some other community. "What is our loss is the other's gain." We don't recollect ever having heard what that extra "W. R." stands for in Walter's name, probably for Willing and Ready. At any rate, his old-time newspaper friends will expect him to always have reserved seats for them at the rose festival.

Governor Meier is to be complimented for his recognition of outstanding service shown by the reappointment of Carl Washburne of Eugene to the state highway commission. When one of Carl's ability is willing to take the time and go to the expense of serving in such a capacity as this his state is fortunate.

Difference in Bibles

The principal differences between the Protestant and Catholic versions of the Bible are a slight difference in the division of the verses containing the Ten Commandments and the fact that the Roman Catholic church recognizes as canonical the 14 books of Apocrypha, which are not regarded as canonical, but of literary or historical interest only by Protestant churches. Both are founded upon the Hebrew records and writings and the works of the apostles.—Washington Star.

Two Locomotives That Made Civil War History

The old wood-burning locomotive known as the "General" has long been on display at Chattanooga. The equally famous "Texas" is housed at Atlanta. In Civil war times some enterprising Union spies stole the "General" while it stood with steam up on a siding near Big Shanty, Ga. The Confederate engine crew were having breakfast at a tavern near at hand. By handcar and afoot they followed up the track until they found and commandeered the old freight engine, "Texas," and then the real chase started.

Box cars on fire were rolled down grade on the single track line by the fleeing Federals. Heavy rains were falling, but they managed to set fire to a bridge at Chickamauga over which the "Texas" scooted just before it crashed. At last the Unionists set the "General" in reverse and seat it speeding southward while they took to the woods. The southerners reversed the "Texas" just in time to avoid a collision, and then managed to capture these enterprising spies.

Manna Found No Favor With Wanderer in Asia

Iraq is not all plain and marsh; there are forests in the north, which yield even the "divine" food of the Hebrews in the wilderness. For the first time, in Bagdad recently, I saw manna (sap of the European flowering ash), and I did not hanker for a fraction of an omer of it. A look, a taste—and the mercy of Jehovah!

It is exhibited in burlap, a blackish mass, hard and insipid. Even made into a candy plentifully powdered with sugar and packed in wooden boxes, it is no more than acceptable; "Turkish delight" makes it bitter with envy.

When the Bedouin Arab tasted first the crude product and then the candy, he said: "My boot, if cooked with sugar, will be toothsome." He preferred pickled locusts.—Ameen Rihani in Asia.

Revised Motto

In the olden days Imperial Spain inscribed on her coins a picture of the pillars of Hercules, which stood on either side of the straits of Gibraltar.

These mighty roocks marked the western boundary of the empire of Spain. Beyond these rolled the mighty unexplored ocean. On the scroll over the picture of the pillars of Hercules they inscribed the words Ne Plus Ultra—nothing beyond. After Columbus, the man of mighty faith, discovered America, Spain struck out the negative, leaving the inscription Plus Ultra, "more beyond." For every earnest soul there is always more beyond. Strike out the negative and make Plus Ultra your motto.—Montreal Family Herald.

The Firefly's Light

The light produced by the firefly is believed to be caused by the oxidization of gases in a series of air cells located on the abdomen of the insect and not, as originally believed, the result of the presence of phosphorus. There are many types, including the beetle in the United States, known as the lightning bug. In tropical countries, the insects are much larger and their light much more brilliant.

The glowworm of Europe is a species of lightning bug of which the female has no wings. Because of this, the female and the larvae, while still possessed of the mysterious power of light, are usually termed glowworms.

Growth of Bamboo

In its early stages timber bamboo resembles many of our common grasses. The leaves are long and narrow and the canes or stems are greenish, but quite hard. As with some grasses, the timber bamboo has creeping underground stems or rhizomes. They spread from the parent plant in all directions; new eyes or buds develop on the rhizomes, from which spring new plants. After a few years the grove has increased in area and its 70-foot stems 4 to 5 inches in diameter, waving in the breeze, present a magnificent appearance. Wherever cotton will grow bamboos will thrive, says the Department of Agriculture.

Italy's Artistic Glories

Italy is history in stone and canvas; here are meccas of the soul like Rome or Assisi, which Dante called "the garden of the Peninsula," and Ronan "the Galilee of Italy." Here for the literary sauntere is the road to Arque, with its vine-clad hillsides, that Petrarch, lover of Laura, so enjoyed; here you may ride with Byron along the banks of the Brenta or on the hillsides of Este and enjoy with "Childe Harold" the "fairest garden of the world." Here are Michael Angelo and Raphael, and Cellini and other immortal artists.

Similarity in Problems

"All problems," said Hi Ho, the sage of Chinatown, "are alike in one respect. If you make a slight error at the beginning of a calculation, the more diligently you labor, the further away you get from the answer."—Washington Star.

Goat's Milk Valuable

The use of goats' milk is common in Switzerland, Germany, Cuba, Mexico, and other countries, and even in our own country in certain sections and the larger cities. The goat takes up little room and produces quite a quantity of good milk. Goats' milk has been used extensively in infant hospitals and other places as a substitute for cows' milk.

Financial Note

Yes, it is revealed by those steeped in numismatic lore, serves as legal tender in northern Manchuria, probably because it can be so conveniently liquidated.—San Jose Mercury Herald.

Garden Club

To those of us gardeners, to whom it is not permitted to do much traveling, how interesting it is to know something of the history and natural habitat of the plants in our gardens, and how it came about that they now grow in these same gardens.

Men have never been satisfied to raise only those plants which they found growing in their particular soils. They have all wanted new plants, better varieties and in their journeyings have found and brought home to their own gardens plants that seemed desirable or that pleased their fancy.

The first organized expedition for this purpose, of which we have any record, occurred during the reign of Queen Hatshepsut of Egypt, about 1570 B. C., when she sent a fleet of ships and a crew of her best gardeners to the land of Pent to bring back incense trees to plant in the garden before her great temple at Luxor. The story of this expedition and its success is carved on the walls of the temple. The scenes depict the gardeners loading the ships with incense trees, planted in tubs, and piling the deck with seeds.

This doesn't mean that Queen Hatshepsut's gardeners were the first men ever to introduce the plants of one land into another, but they were the first ones to get into the records.

Today Uncle Sam has a group of explorers who visit all the countries of the world, penetrating deep into unexplored regions, through great dangers and many hardships in search of new and rare plants that may add to man's comfort, health or the beauty of his gardens.

If we can learn something of our plant's origin and the story of their journey to our gardens, what a fascinating study it would make.

For instance, in my tiny rockery I have Scotch Heather and Blue Bells of Scotland, a Swedish Bell Heather, Scillas from England, bulbs from Holland, daisies from South Africa, dwarf zinnias from Mexico, regal lilies from far western China, gold banded lilies from Japan, plants from our own mountains and others I haven't yet learned the origin of. By giving my imagination play I can take quite a journey while visiting my rock garden.

Among the shrubs we have English laurel, African tamarix, lilacs from Persia and France, a viburnuh from Korea, and many others. Let's get acquainted with them.

"When I walk into my garden,
I like to think it knows,
An understanding heart is there,
Among the fragrant rows."
