In Germany the republican constitution confers the same rights upon women as upon men. Through their influence in parliament, German women have been able to effect passage of laws beneficial to women.

Garden Club

The rose has come down to us rich in glamour and romance. It was venerated in every primitive culture. It was a symbol in the religion of many savage tribes and the medicine men used the petals for charms and amulets. Sometimes, too, the flowers were brewed into a tonic tea for invalids. Warriors wore the rose on their shields and the gallant and women wore the rose for love. Its very fragrance was thought to have a strong disinfectant power. When the Crusaders left Jerusalem after the long wars in the east, Saladin, the Mohammedan commander, brought 500 camel loads of blooms into the city in order that the Mosque of Omar might be cleansed of the infidel's touch with rose water.

Many believe that only an expert can grow roses but fortunately this is not true.

Perhaps the beautiful blooms grown in hot houses will not thrive in our gardens for they are often of delicate constitution and need delicate handling. But there are many kinds of hardy and strong and will repay you for your care and attention with many fine blooms of lovely fragrance and color.

Perhaps it is the very hazard of rose growing that makes it such an absorbing business or hobby, for while no lances are broken in a garden, there are armies to fight—armies of insects. No legions are lost, but tempers are. A single rosebug, for example, can destroy the work of months. There is inclement weather to be fought, it takes a two-fronted battle to win any proper success. That is why men of affairs will spend their odd moments for years pottering among flower stems and weeds, and die happy because one Killarney has brought them a prize.

Roses in the Subway.

A woman in girl with faded eyes came stumbling through the crowded car clutching her burden to her breast. As though she held a star.

Way to Roseburg, where Dr. Ostrander is employed in the veterans' hospital.

And tumbling from her pinched white hands—

Roses like captured hostages.

From far and fair, the rushing train was like a hush. The flowers' scent breathed faintly on the stale, whirling air.

Like some dim sacrament.

Saw a garden stretching out, and morning on it like a crown, and o'er a bed of crimson bloom my Mother bending down.
