GOVERNOR CLAUDIUS ECLAIR

They're grooming our bitter friend, Claudius Eclair Ingalls, for governor. Anyday, he needs grooming.

He probably would remain at Corvallis so as to be able to hold down his job as fastest postal card reader in the Corvallis postoffice and his other job as editorial writer for Oregon's second best newspaper, in fact, Oregon's best daily newspaper.

That would move the capital to Corvallis from Portland, where it has been during recent years. Between the two we prefer Corvallis, because it has a better golf course than any we have played in Portland.

Another thing, with the state capital, Corvallis probably would be satisfied to let Eugene have what Corvallis thinks is the best of the higher education deal.

We could easily stand Claudius as governor for four years to stop this bickering between him and Bucolic Bill Tugman of the R-G.

Now that Eclair is a sure-fire candidate for chief executive, what has he started to write poetry about him. Eclair says he's now one ahead of the editor of The Sentinel because the latter has never had any poems written about his legs.

Claudius is sadly mistaken, as usual. The feature of the editorial convention held at Prineville several years ago was the poetry written about the editorial limbs. Some of the poetry was as bad as the subject and as lacking in symmetry or whatever it is that is supposed to go into poetry.

One thing about Claudius that we like, he lets bygones be bygones when he has a chance to serve the state. That he would make a fair and unprejudiced, also a wise, state administrator is evidenced by the fact that his first nomination for an important post was that of the editor of this great family journal.

We'll let bygones be bygones also and boost Claudius for the job inasmuch as this writer can't afford to be a candidate, not having held a postoffice during the republican regime.

DISLOYAL WORKERS.

The basic idea of the NRA program is more jobs for the working man. It would seem that if anyone would enter wholeheartedly into such a program it would be the working man himself.

Yet NRA officials have felt it necessary to issue a warning against any worker attempting to hold two jobs. "Repeated complaints have been received," the warning states, "that certain employes in the lumber industry have been working in two jobs, drawing double pay, while thousands of unemployed sought work."

One man holding two jobs these days would be reprehensible even if there were no NRA program. The practice is, as an NRA official characterizes it, a vicious one. In a Portland dance hall musicians were employed at night who already had worked a full day during daylight. They got the job because, already having had a day's work, they offered to work cheaper than other musicians.

No doubt these workers and these musicians would throw a fit if their employers neglected to live up to the NRA code, but a chiseler is a gentleman compared to anyone who, already having had a full day's work, beats another fellow out of a job by offering to work cheaper.

The NRA program is not going to go over unless severe punishment is dealt out to those who would hog all the benefits, be they employers or employes.

MORE WOODPILES.

The Sentinel started something when it made reference recently to woodpiles that attract attention along Pacific highway through Salem and Albany. Papers in both cities reprinted the editorial, or referred to it, and made apologies for their cities, also using the editorial as an excuse for prodding the residents of their cities to action in removing unsightly and dangerous walls of wood.

Now comes the Portland Spectator quoting the words of a movie star, who commented upon Portland woodpiles. The Spectator publishes a picture of a city street with woodpiles hiding houses for an entire block. It also quoted The Sentinel's editorial.

We're pleased to be of assistance to our sister cities, and trust no woodpiles have yet appeared on the highway through Cottage Grove.

CODES AND LEGISLATING.

About the most criticized thing is the legislature. We hear a great deal about the ridiculous things legislators do. Those who criticize infer that they would do much better.

We have recently had a real test of what the people can do for themselves. Every business and every industry has been asked to present a code under which it will operate during the period of the president's reemployment campaign. Those who head businesses and industries are intelligent. They are about the average from which legislative membership is selected.

These average persons have been doing what the legislature is called upon to do, legislating for the regulation of business, with the exception that these persons have legislated for their own interests only, while the legislature regulates all business. Every person ought to be able to say what he wants for his own business.

It is the opinion of The Sentinel that when the codes get to operating it will be found that they do things which the framers did not expect them to do. When that happens to a legislative act it is said that someone slipped in a joker. A great many jokers are likely to be found in the codes, and there will be demands for amendments.

If the codes do exactly what they were expected to do, the framers will have done a much better job than any legislature. If they are found to be defective, the framers will be in the same class as legislators and probably will be more sympathetic hereafter.

The banquet habit is the making of the head and the ruination of the stomach. The man who marries money seldom gets a treasure of a wife.

THE NEW ARMY LEADS.

No doubt the army, now as always, is encumbered with a proportion of martinets. Possibly there are army officers, now as always who could be classed as militarists, spoiling for a fight. To those who have never been in or with the army, there are many things about army discipline which seem petty or mysterious.

To visit one of the 3-C camps in the Eugene area, however, is to get an entirely new understanding of army methods. Underlying all the disciplines of army service, there is now and there always has been leadership, and that of the finest sort. In the 3-C camps, the regular army is submitting to a unique test.

In the 3-C camps, all the ordinary disciplines are removed. There is no imposing array of sergeants and corporals to drill men till they "click." There are no guardhouses, no military punishments. There are no salutes to promote the habits of respect. The utmost punishment is to send a man home if he will not work.

Yet the 3-C camps are developing the same spirit which makes crack regiments. The men take pride in their camps because it is pleasanter and healthier to be in camps which are clean and neat. They take pride in their appearance and in their work. These youngsters, rescued from the idleness of city streets, are getting a lot of new ideas about life.

They like these friendly, gentlemanly young officers and the kind, respectful workmen of the forestry service. To begin with, as one young man put it, they "sure know their stuff." There is some good reason for everything they ask. And that's all they need to do—ask.

Strange as it may seem, you will find these professional soldiers discussing seriously and with intense interest the social aspects of the woods experiment. They understand all the problems the men have been up against and they are eager to help.

The work that is being done by the 3-C men is important, but it is overshadowed by the admirable job that is being done in leadership. The army knows men. No other agency could do the job that is being done in the 3-C camps to lead men to good citizenship.

Tomatoes Beautifying Home Country

Tomatoes of the Cottage Grove country have taken an esthetic turn of mind and are taking a prominent part in the move to make this section a more pleasant and prettier place in which to live. A vine at the C. A. King ranch has produced a perfect rosette that looks like a staillette from Oregon caves.

Water Rights Are Asked.

Salem, Ore., Sept. 1.—Water rights at the state water board offices today included F. M. Chapman and E. L. McReynolds of Cottage Grove. They seek 12 second feet from Hawley creek, tributary of the Willamette river, for irrigation.

Loose Leaf Binders, Sentinel.

"The Great Jordan," coming to the Arcade theatre September 12 and 13, has played all the most prominent theatres, both here and abroad. His work is exceptional, the most outstanding act of its nature in the world today.

"The Great Jordan" can contact the answers to your problems in a most amazing manner. He has had for the past 15 years the most profound success in his predictions, among which were the Long Beach earthquake, the San Diego fiend and murder, the Chicago air crash and will at this engagement give his psychic impression of Lamson murder.

"The Great Jordan" is not to be confused with mind readers, fortune tellers, clairvoyants, card readers, or any others of this class. His work is definitely individual and the 3-C boys in most of the camps on the western coast whom he has entertained will testify that his performance is the greatest upon the American stage.

This is a great opportunity for people of Cottage Grove and vicinity to have their minds relieved and burdens lifted. Your name is not mentioned. Only initials are used. Leave your question at box office now. Two days only, Tuesday and Wednesday, September 12 and 13, at Arcade Theatre.

Cabbage Grows Many Tiny Heads

Thornton Corners, Sept. 6.—A new variety of cabbage that has myriad heads instead of the ordinary leaves in layers was picked a few days ago from the S. P. Shortridge garden at Thornton Corners. The plants were of the Danish ballhead variety and all others grew true to variety. The freak or throwback, weighed five pounds. Each miniature head was complete and when the head was sliced the result was what appeared to be discs of compactly set white roses. The flavor and tenderness were in no way impaired.
