Garden Club

Blooming in the Fall.
Dandelion, why so late.
With your golden crown?
Al! your comrades long ago
Laid their splendor down.

When the lilac scents the air
You should meet the sod,
Not be glinting thus while near
Faints the goldenrod.

To the time of robin trills
Does your gold belong.
Not to shortened days when sounds
The cricket's dreamy song.

Though your face smiles bravely up
From the grasses dead,
Waiting you my heart forgets
Summer's wealth is fled.

Blessings, blessings, sunny flower,
For your shining grace;
Doubly welcome that you deck
Autumn's furrowed face.

Like the dauntless heart you seem
Nath' prision's power,
Smiling bravely though above
Threatening tempests lower.

On Once Forbidden Food
For a long time the greater part of the ancient world considered it a sin to eat the flesh of the ox.
