make it necessary for someone to ascertain the difference in cost of education on the two campuses, but once the proportions were settled, as they were for the millage taxes, the fight might quiet down.

Of course, under such a method, we should hear that we couldn't compete with other colleges in courses provided, and in keeping competent instructors. Roscoe Nelson told us there is no competition between lighthouses. Possibly a resolution of the legislature could declare there is no competition between colleges.

At least this method of solution as any other that we have seen.

Dissolving Indebtedness. THE subject of debt looms large on the mental horizon of today. Quite apart from the manifold questions bound up with the consideration of debts, those sad legacies of strife which so greatly concern the nation at this time, there remains the fact that many individuals are facing a situation in which their assets seem inadequate to meet the liabilities they have incurred.

Often, as a result of depreciated values, they see the value of their possessions continually diminishing, and begin to question the stability they once accepted as a fixed standard.

It is helpful to examine Jesus' utterances on debt in the High Sermon which Christian Science throws upon them. The first mention occurs in the prayer which he gave to his disciples in response to their request that he should teach them to pray. The Master's words, "Forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors," are wonderfully illuminated by the spiritual interpretation which Mary Baker Eddy has given them in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 17): "And Love is reflected in love."

Love, then, is the primary solution of this question of debt. Love of God for His children reflected by them to one another. Jesus evidently saw the need of amplifying this subject in a way that would be easily understood by his hearers, for he later expounded it by means of a parable. He told them of a servant who owed a vast sum which he was apparently unable to pay. As his earnest request, however, his lord forgave him this debt. We read that this servant then went out and finding a fellow servant who owed him a comparatively small amount "took him by the throat, saying, Pay me that thou owest."

And disregarding the debtor's plea for patience, he cast him into prison. Their lord, however, became cognizant of the situation and withdrew his pardon, requiring the creditor to pay his own debt.

It is interesting to notice that neither of these debtors protested his inability to pay or asked for the amount to be reduced. They both prayed the creditor for patience, promising to pay the full amount owing. In the first case it is recorded that his lord was compassionate on the servant and forgave him his debt; while in the second the creditor took his fellow servant by the throat, or, metaphorically speaking, established such a "strangle hold" upon him as to render it impossible for him to free himself. It is clear that the mental qualities of patience and compassion extended to one who is in difficulties reassure and help him to win his freedom, while a cruel and unmerciful attitude of thought only tightens his bonds.
