Vancouver Island Only

Place Skylark Survives

Vancouver Island, B. C., is the only spot on the North American continent where the English skylark, rare singer, makes his home, according to a writer in the Detroit News. On any day, from spring to fall, its song may be heard within a ten minutes' drive from the heart of Victoria.

Morning is the best time to hear it sing. Bird lovers come from as far as the Atlantic coast to hear its song. The bird is heard in all sections of Victoria. Several songs may be heard in the course of half an hour near any of its nesting places.

It is the only survivor of 1,000 English song birds imported in 1903 and 1913, the others having been the robin, goldfinch, blue tit and brown linnet. All were released in the wilds of Vancouver island, near Victoria, and all perished long ago, except the skylark. Of all the attempts made to colonize this bird on the North American continent, Vancouver Island is the one place where he survived. Colonies at Dearborn, Mich., imported in 1913; Portland, Ore.; and Flatfish, Long Island, disappeared shortly after they were released.

Victoria, which has been called "a bit of Old England" because of its people, customs and setting, makes a happy sanctuary for this bird that is truly English. He is found, however, in the Hawaiian Islands, New Zealand, Persia, northern India, and Egypt.

In appearance his upper part is dark brown, his throat and breast light buff, creamy white underneath, although scarcely larger than a sparrow, he is used as a food in some countries. Victoria, however, has thrown up protective laws about him.

Shaggy-Haired Mammoths Larger Than Elephants

Mammoths were huge shaggy-haired beasts, resembling both the mastodons which preceded them and the elephants of today. They had trunks and tusks. They lived in what are now North America, Europe, and Asia, and existed during the ice age, which started about the beginning of the Pleistocene period and lasted up to the beginning of the modern age, or the last fifteen or twenty thousand years. Bones of mammoths have been found by scientists in many parts in this country and Europe.

In Siberia complete specimens have been found frozen in the ground by modern scientific investigators. Ivory from the remains of mammoths for many hundreds of years has been an article of commerce in Siberia. The flesh and hair of the specimens found in frozen ground were in a good state of preservation. Mammoths were larger than the present-day Indian elephants and some of them were larger than the huge African elephants. They differed from the modern elephant in that their ears were much smaller and their tusks longer and more curving.—Chicago Tribune.

The Northmen

The Northmen were sea rovers from Denmark, Norway and Sweden who became famous during the period between the middle of the eighth and the beginning of the thirteenth centuries. They were also known as Vikings. Many of them penetrated into far lands and subdued weaker rivals. They began their first attack upon England in 787 and raided the shores of Flanders and France. From about the middle of the ninth century bodies of Northmen established themselves in permanent camps at the mouth of French rivers. They took possession of Paris, although eventually they were repulsed. Alfred drove them from England, but Charles the Simple of France turned over to Rollo, one of their chiefs, the duchy of Normandy. As early as 1300 they entered the Mediterranean and founded kingdoms in lower Italy and Sicily. They also penetrated into Russia.

Goats' Milk Is Popular

Goats are kept for three main reasons. The first is because they can supply enough milk for the average family cheaply, thriving on poor or rough land. The second is because the goat does not contract or give off in its milk the germs of tuberculosis. The first named reason has behind it the goat's omnivorous appetite, which includes all the ordinary crops as well as some weeds and leaves of low-growing deciduous trees. The third reason has to do with the peculiar qualities of goats' milk and it is by far the most important from the viewpoint of human health. Chemical analyses have shown that goats' milk more closely approximates the human mother's milk and has a large proportion of the more important chemical elements than has cows' milk.—Montreal Herald.

Trinidad

One of the wonders of the world is located on the British island of Trinidad, one of the southernmost of the West Indies group, just off the coast of Venezuela. Life is the famous Pitch lake at La Brea, not far from Port of Spain.

Parrot Lives Long Life

It is not unusual for a parrot to attain an age of fifty years, and when properly cared for these birds sometimes live to be one hundred years old.

Snakes for Medicine and Food The Cantonese eat the cobra; they are the only people who do. Snakes are used for medicines all over China, and generally for diseases that probably do not exist.

London's Disappearances Although persons "disappear" in London at the rate of 18 a day, most of them subsequently return. There are, however, 300 a year of whom no trace is ever found.
