Cleaning Cistern, Ready for Spring

Suction Attachment Will Remove Sediment and Save Water.

By E. W. Lehmann, Agricultural Engineering Department, University of Illinois—WNU Service.
Soft water is both a labor saver and a money saver for the home and it need not be lost or wasted in order to clean out the cistern and get it ready for the spring rains.

To be sure it may be desirable to clean the cistern thoroughly before the soft water supply for the home is collected during the early spring rains. However, if the cistern is reasonably full of water, the problem of cleaning becomes a difficult one, especially if the water is needed and must be saved.

Under such circumstances, it is necessary to use a special pump so that the accumulation at the bottom may be removed without disturbing the contents of the cistern, except just at the bottom. This is accomplished by having a pump with a special funnel-shaped suction attachment at the bottom of the pipe. As the pump is operated, the suction unit is moved around over the floor so the material which has settled at the bottom may be pumped out. In this manner, much of the waste and foul material may be removed and the water made more satisfactory for use without losing or wasting the present supply.

If it is not necessary to save the present supply in the cistern, a more thorough job may be done by pumping out all the water. In this case the walls may be brushed down, the cistern floor scrubbed and all refuse removed completely. Little attention need be given the cistern, if proper precaution is taken in collecting and filtering the supply.

Heated Water Treatment

Kills Disease in Seed

Putting cabbage seed in heated water for 25 minutes kills black leg, black rot, leaf spots, and other cabbage-destroying fungi, according to Dr. Charles Chupp, specialist in vegetable diseases at the New York State College of Agriculture. An 18-minute bath in water at 122 degrees will also kill diseases common to cauliflower, brussels sprouts, and turnips, he says. The one objection to the treatment is that old seed will not sprout well later. Seedsman and growers, according to Professor Chupp, may lose by this process for a short time, but this loss, he says, is more than offset by development of disease-free plants.

He states that most seedsmen in New York state are having their seed treated and tested, and adds that canneries and creameries are permitting seedsmen to use the canner water heating equipment to make the treatment.

Work on cabbage diseases began in this state four years ago, when farmers in Ontario county asked for help in saving one-tenth of their cabbage crop which they were losing by plant diseases.

Dehydrating Hay

There is gradually coming into use a method of dehydrating hay which promises to provide very satisfactory feed. Those using this method report splendid results. Legumes and grasses may be cut earlier, thereby increasing their digestibility and palatability as well as increasing the percentage of protein. While this method of handling the hay crop is very promising and provides an excellent feed, it has not gone far enough to be a factor in dairy farm operations. The silo is still in extensive use. New methods may cause something else to take its place, but this will be some time in the future.—Hoard's Dairyman.

Varieties of Buckwheat

Pure varieties of buckwheat are very scarce. Probably the best sort for this country, writes a correspondent in the Montreal Herald, is that known as the Silver Hulled. Common black buckwheat is, however, very satisfactory when grown under favorable conditions. Buckwheat will do fairly well on very poor soil and under poor conditions, but it will do better on good soil and under favorable weather conditions. It should not be sown too early, very late June or early July unless it is sown very early, as early as wheat. It will do well at either seeding but will probably not do very well if sown between those dates.

Vitamin A in Potatoes

The good, old-fashioned names for potatoes such as Irish Cobblers and the Early Rose are passing into limbo and in place of them are cropping up such names as Katanidia, Chippeva, Rural New Yorker, Busola, Arrostook, Wonder, Sutton's Flourball and other such names. Some of the newer potatoes are the result of the discovery that the South American potato was a fruitful source of vitamin A and despite the yellow color of the flesh of the potato, its value as food was considered sufficient to warrant experimentation to produce a better potato in this country.

In using nicotine sulphate (Black Leaf 40) for either aphids or thrips put the nicotine in spray tank first, after the tank is filled with water, then add the lime-sulphur solution. In all spraying for control of scab it is essential that all sides of both fruit and foliage be covered. Don't try to get a clean crop of fruit by merely sprinkling a tree. Wet it.

Mormon Settlement Landmarks
Two old brick houses, occupied by farmers near Burlington, Wis., are landmarks of the Mormon settlement, led by (King) James Jesse Strang, which moved from Burlington in 1847. The houses were built in 1840. Strang later left the Mormons and set up a kingdom on Beaver Island in Lake Michigan.
