BOOZE STILL BAD.

We heard a great deal, during the years of so-called prohibition, about how much better things would be with legalized liquor. While this writer made no predictions, he was inclined to believe there was a possibility that the government would impose and enforce restrictions that might clean up the situation some.

But booze is bad and seems determined not to change its spots. About two months ago The Sentinel predicted that unless there was a radical change in conditions around beer parlors, we would see a movement to vote beer and booze out of Cottage Grove. Since that time there has been a notable improvement around beer parlors. City police officers have shown in no uncertain way that they will not wink at sales of beer to minors and to drunken persons. It is pretty difficult for the fellow behind the bar to tell the fellow in front that he can't have any more beer, for the fellow who has had too much usually is a most unreasoning person, but city authorities have shown their hand and the fellow who would continue selling beer will have to see that the law is obeyed.

What is true in Cottage Grove probably is true to a greater or less degree in all cities. Within municipal boundaries it is rather simple to enforce liquor regulations, but it is said that beer emporiums outside of city limits are running wild. The Eugene News recently carried a news story that showed conditions in these beer parlor-dance halls to be deplorable and worse than conditions of saloon days, when at least women did not frequent saloons and go home soused, as it is reported they are doing today from county-licensed beer parlors.

It is a serious reflection upon Americans that they can not imbibe liquor with reason, especially in public places, but as long as they can't it won't be long until we have another demand for prohibition.

When we have that demand it will be because of our abuse of liquor, because those who demanded liquor on the grounds of personal liberty have had no respect whatever for the rights of others once they get a beer or two or a drink or two under their belts. Unless we can be reasonable in the consumption of liquor in public places, it won't be long until the right to consume it in public places will again be taken from us.

We are puzzled by a recent item in Portland News-Telegram from which the following is a quotation: "Portland's own symphony orchestra WAS TO GO on the air Saturday . . . For Portland music lovers it WAS the last chance. . . Doors WILL BE thrown open. . . The program WAS to conclude. . . The capitals are ours. Did the symphony orchestra go on the air? Or had it gone on the air? If it had gone on the air did it come back and go on again so that the doors could be opened again? Did the program take place before the News-Telegram was printed, or afterward, or not at all, or what?"

This kind of metropolitan reporting is too deep for us.

THE GIMME GUY.

One of the regrettable developments of the depression has been the gimme guy.

He is everywhere that anything is being given away and his lot has been made easy because of our attitude toward the unfortunate. He makes no more effort than he has to to help himself, but he is ever ready to help himself by accepting what he has not earned, and would not have been offered him.

The gimme guy is to be strictly separated from the worthy unfortunate, persons who would not be in their present condition if they could get employment to prevent it, persons who hesitate to accept the charity which is necessary for their existence and which is gladly given.

The gimme guy makes the way difficult for the deserving unfortunate as well as for the agencies dispensing charity.

It is because of the gimme guy who would accept everything without giving anything that charity dispensing agencies have to ask questions of the deserving that are embarrassing, which such agencies wish they did not have to ask.

Public funds have to be made to go as far as possible, for which reason the deserving have to be separated, so far as possible, from the undeserving. These investigations for which relief agencies are severely criticized are the fault of the gimme guy. The disbursing agencies would much rather that every case coming to them were a deserving case. They would much rather that there were not those trying to get all they can from the government while the getting is good.

Editorials this week were written by the editor while at home having a session with influenza. He believes that is the name the Greeks have for it. At any rate, there wasn't much of anything worthwhile he could do, and the way he feels right now he doesn't give a doggone whether anyone reads 'em or not or likes 'em or not.

FAIRVIEW.
