THE GENTLE BOSS.
The quadruped of the genus bovine is not an aristocrat. She even has the unrefined habit of chewing her cud in public. She is careless about her person. But when it comes to getting requisites she is a top-notch. Although her only product in life is milk, with which she parts without protest, it reaches our tables in a variety of forms, and who is there who could thoroughly enjoy his meals without some article that we should not have except for bossy's liberality in dispensing lactical fluid?

It is even doubtful if our health would be so good without dairy products. There are cases on record of persons who have lived to a ripe old age on no other diet than milk. No other item of food contains so many of the essentials to bodily health and vigor. Physicians and scientists say the growing child should have not less than a quart of milk a day, and that much milk probably would be better for the adult than a quart of beer.

Some of these facts, most of them perhaps, are generally recognized, but how many know that the dairy cow is the greatest single source of income for the farm?

In 1926 the income from dairy products was 1 1/2 billions, and from all other sources the farm income was 9 1/2 billions.

While the income from dairy products dropped to 1 1/3 billions in 1932, farm income from other sources dropped to 8 1/2 billions. The income from the cow in 1932 was 24.5 per cent of the entire farm income. Except for the dairy cow the farmer would have been in a much worse plight than he now is.

In the period from 1920 to 1932 the per capita consumption of milk increased from 635 pounds to 857 pounds, an increase of 32 per cent. What effect the come-back of beer has had on milk consumption has not yet been determined.

We ought to have more respect for the awkward, homely, gentle-eyed creature that provides us with so many of the necessities of life and so large a portion of the farm income.

WE LEARN SO LITTLE.
We hear a great deal of criticism of the voter. He goes to the polls and votes for candidates of whom he knows nothing.

He votes for a candidate because that candidate is a republican or democrat, because he is a conservative or a radical, because he has made promises that appeal to the voter, because he looks well on a campaign card, or for some other of a hundred reasons that really are not sufficient.

Months after he is in office, there is complaining because he is not the kind of fellow the voter thought he was, because he is not keeping his promises, or for some other reason that is no better than the one that impelled the voter to vote for him.

Voters who are loud in their criticism of the legislature go into their booths to cast their ballots upon measures which they have not even read, let alone studied.

Members of the legislature at least have measures explained to them, and most members give some study to every bill upon which they are expected to vote. If members of the legislature voted with as little thought as do some voters, there would be far more bad laws and far fewer good laws.

But the prize one we heard of the other day. This writer was conversing with one who has college degrees, one who has taken a deep interest in politics, one who gives study to men and measures, one who has been a factor for good in the state, one who would make a good pattern for those who wish to vote intelligently.

The subject of campaign expenses came up. This writer explained that many campaign expenses are never listed. The listener couldn't understand why any candidate should fail to list all his expenses.

And the reason this person couldn't understand was that he believed the state repaid campaign expenses. He thought the statement of expenses filed with the state was in effect a statement upon which repayment to the candidate was based.

When a person of high intelligence, such as this person is, had not learned any better than that, what can be expected of those who have had little opportunity? Incidentally, wouldn't candidates have a picnic if the state repaid campaign expenses?

Chancellor Kerr meant it when he said he would retire this summer, and the search has started for a successor. The state board is going to have a difficult job finding a person so well qualified as the retiring school administrator. Even those who are pleased to see him retire, and they are not as many as they were, will admit that much.

Sex is to be taken out of motion pictures, says Czar Will Hayes. It is too late. Our morals are already ruined. Besides, taking sex out of pictures is likely to put the movie business in such condition that Hayes will have nothing to lose.

All Eugene men have been ordered to grow whiskers to advertise the Oregon Trail pageant. Some of them have faces that are better covered.

Congress has adjourned. The weather got too hot and, besides, there was nothing more that F. D. wanted.

The king of Italy has opened parliament. Where did he come from?

The Cocktail
The cocktail is said to have been invented by one Elizabeth Flanagan, who was a sutler to the army and followed the troop of Virginia Horse, commanded by Colonel Burr, who took up winter quarters at a place called "Four Corners," between Ferrytown and White Plains, New York, during the Revolutionary war. Here she set up a hotel largely patronized by officers of the French and American forces.

Knowing Bacteria
Bacteria have been in the world with man ever since he first arrived on earth, and he has wrestled with them from birth till death through all the generations of mankind; yet he has known practically nothing about them until during the past fifty years, when he has learned how to study them at his work.
