UNWARRANTED CRITICISM.

Our usually gentle and colorful friend, Editor Cunt Haight of Blue Mountain Eagle, Canyon City, gives the editor of The Sentinel the very devil for something this editor didn't write. This editor is getting accustomed to having this happen, but didnt' expect it from the Canyon City editor, and the latter's error is hardly excusable, for the reason that the first two lines of the editorial which aroused our editorial friend gave full credit to the Prineville Oregonian. Editor Haight is going down to the legislature, and if he makes the kind of legislator we expect him to make, he must be more discerning, but what he has to say is worth reading, even though the criticism is directed at another editor, so here it is:

"Editor of the Cottage Grove Sentinel says that the government owes you nothing. The government owes no one anything. This was probably written on a full stomach and on a day when the editor had about six bits in his pocket. And so feeling a little chesty he announces that government owes no man anything. We have a letter from a woman. Her husband died and left her three small sons. She took in washing, did janitor work and supported and maintained and educated the three sons and turned them over to the government as splendid citizens. She put her small savings in a bank. The bank went broke and she lost her life's savings. The government took her two sons and put a uniform on them and sent them to Europe on a mission of murder. Now this very splendid woman, old and helpless, is offered a pauper's pension of $10 a month. Her sons are married, have children of their own but cannot get employment. Cottage Grove Sentinel says that government owes this woman nothing. She gave her sons, her life, her all and now let's cart her off to the poor farm to die in misery, with deep grief and a broken heart. Government owes this now old hag nothing says the Cottage Grove Sentinel. The Blue Mountain Eagle says the hell with that kind of government. If that is the gratitude of constituted society, then all are advised to shape their course by neither giving nor serving the government that has no reward for you but a broken heart, a wounded spirit and a pauper's grave."

Inasmuch as this editor did not write the editorial that is criticized, he can easily express agreement with the Canyon City paper's sentiments, but this editor doubts very much whether the Prineville paper, for which the editorial was written, had anything in mind to deserve the criticism directed at its editorial. Its remarks, so The Sentinel judged, were directed at those who feel that the government owes them everything, and that they are entitled to everything without any effort on their part to benefit society or serve the government from which they expect so much. The woods are full of this kind that need the criticism directed at them by the Prineville newspaper. On the other hand, there are many, as the Canyon City paper points out, who have received shabby treatment.

WHAT WILL REPUBLICANS DO?

Both of Oregon's senators, both republicans, on the eve of their departure for Washington, proclaimed that the republican party can not hope to return to power merely by waiting for the democratic party to make mistakes serious enough to give the republicans an issue.

The democratic party has made mistakes, but it has not made mistakes serious enough to overcome the things it has done which the people want, or think they want. They have not made mistakes serious enough to cause the party any great concern as long as billions can be poured out in relief funds to keep food in the stomachs of the people and clothes on their backs.

As a matter of fact, things have been accomplished during the past two years that the republicans would not have undone, at least they would not dare say so. It is difficult for a republican newspaper to have to admit that much, but probably no more difficult than it was for the republican senators.

We would not go back to child labor, and regulation of wages and working hours is fundamentally sound.

Part of the agricultural program is no doubt very faulty.

The administration undoubtedly erred in believing it could completely regulate every little business in the entire country, regardless of how fair such regulations might be. Price fixing seems also to have been an error, but prosperity can be brought back without either of these, although probably not nearly so quickly as if it had been possible to regulate business completely and fix prices.

However, The Sentinel has never believed that minute regulation of industry and fixing of prices would be wise as a permanent thing, even if wise as a temporary expedient. These two features would be likely to deaden initiative, would put the inefficient on something of an equality with the efficient. That would not be good for business.

But failure of these features of the recovery program would not make much of a plank for the republicans. Neither can the republican party with good grace adopt the good features of the New Deal as part of its program, even though most of them were proposed while the republicans were in power.

We may as well face the issue squarely. Unless present signs fail, the best brains of the republican party will be required to provide a platform upon which a republican president can be elected, as our senators have told us.

Admiral Byrd has brought a large section of the antarctic under the American flag. And now we suppose we'll have to be sending warships down there every little while to put down revolutions among the natives.

A dead human body contains chemicals and minerals to the total value of 70 cents, we are informed by a London physician, which proves that some men are worth more dead than alive.

A French scientist declares that wine is better for horses than oran. But too much may have the same effect upon them that it has on some men, and make asses of them.

With all the alphabetical government aids that we have, some of us seem not yet to have learned the ABC's of the New Deal.

HEBRON.

Dec. 11.—Miss LuVerne Lamb of Eugene came home with Miss Annabelle Gilcrist Friday evening and spent the week end. While here she visited Mrs. L. G. Markham near Cottage Grove and accompanied Miss Annabelle Gilcrist and Mrs. P. E. Young to Mrs. F. V. Overton's Saturday afternoon.

M. M. Tison made a business trip to Roseburg Saturday.

Mr. and Mrs. Grover Tison of Dixonville came Tuesday to visit a few days with M. M. Tison and Mr. and Mrs. Fuhrer.

Mrs. Truman Clarke and Allen Abeene celebrated their birthday anniversaries together Friday evening with a dinner at Mrs. Clarke's home. Those present were the Ivan Abeene and Truman Clarke families.

The Ladies' club will hold a Christmas party Wednesday of next week at Mrs. George Kebelbeck's. It will be an all day meeting with a pot-luck dinner.

There will be a telephone meeting at 7:30 on the evening of December 19 at the Farmers' union hall for the purpose of organizing the Coast Fork Telephone company, Inc.

Mrs. Jean Long returned to her home Saturday after spending two weeks caring for her sister-in-law, Mrs. Add Heath.

Mrs. Mary Mackey and Mrs. I. Y. Porter of Lynx Hollow and Mrs. Marian Jackson and son Kenneth of Walker visited Sunday afternoon at the Add Heath home.

E. J. Edwards was home from McKenzie Bridge over night Saturday.

Miss Eunice Edwards entertained the 4-H Chicken club Saturday.

Ravens at Tomb

At the tomb of St. Vincent, in the churchyard of the Cathedral of St. Patriarchal, Lisbon, may be seen the identical pair of ravens that miraculously guided his ship to the capital city of Portugal in the Fourteenth century. The faithful never doubt this.

Dollar First Used in Bohemia

Contrary to popular beliefs, the dollar did not originate in America. In fact, the first coin that ultimately became the dollar was minted in Bohemia and was known as the Joachimstaler. This was shortened to "taler" and finally became the dollar.

Select Best Wheat for the 1935 Crop

Chinch Bugs, Winter Killing Promise to Be Growers' Leading Enemies.

By G. H. Dungan, Associate Chief in Crop Production, University of Illinois.—WNU Service.

With the possibility of another chinch bug infestation in 1935 and the ever-present danger of winter killing, farmers should plant only those varieties of wheat that have proved the best in their respective parts of the state.

Where adopted varieties are planted on strong ground, observations indicate that fair wheat yields can be attained in spite of chinch bug attacks.

In the central part of the state, Illinois Progeny 2 this year again demonstrated its ability to yield well. This variety is a soft wheat with considerable winter hardiness, superior grain quality and high yielding capacity on fertile soils. Wheats of the Turkey type have long been considered best adapted to central Illinois and a variety that can compete with them has to be a good one. Illinois Progeny 2 has done this over a period of eight years in tests at the University of Illinois experiment field near Urbana.

At the experiment field near DeKalb in northern Illinois, five wheat varieties stand out in front with better average yields during the past three or more years. They include Ioturk, Illinois Selection 131, Minturki, Purkof and Wisconsin Pedigree 2. These are all selections from Turkey or a hybrid in which Turkey was one of the parents.

On the Alhambra experiment field in southwestern Illinois, the soft red winter wheats are the best adapted, and here the leading varieties include Fulcaster, Nabob, Illinois Selection 131, Michigan Amber, Red Sea and Fulhio. Of these, Illinois Selection 131 is the only variety not in the soft wheat class.

Oat Straw Best, Most Nutritious for Stock

Much straw will go into the mangers, rather than into the stalls, on farms this winter, because of the unusual scarcity of hay and the better roughages. Feeding straw to live stock is not new, however, as straw has long been used as roughage for horses, cattle, and sheep.

A. L. Harvey, animal husbandry division, University farm, St. Paul, says the feeding value of straw differs widely. Oat straw is the best and most nutritious. Its stems are softer and more pliable than those of the other cereals. Oat straw has about as much total digestible nutrients as corn stover, but only about one-half as much digestible protein. Barley straw is second in feeding value, followed by wheat and rye straw.

On farms where hay or corn stover is available as roughage, it would be preferable to use the straw for bedding or to use it in limited amounts as part of the roughage for wintering stock. On farms where there is a limited amount of hay or corn stover, straw can be used successfully as the sole roughage.

Because straw lacks the protein so necessary for growing animals, it should not be fed extensively to them. It had better be fed to idle work horses, dry cows, or other live stock requiring maintenance only during the fall and winter.

Feed for Dairy Cow

Feed for a dairy cow depends upon the individual animal but as a general rule each cow will require two tons of legume hay, two acres of pasture, 16 bushels of corn, 16 bushels of oats, and 600 pounds of cottonseed meal. Where wheat bran is available this may be substituted for a part of the oats, pound for pound. Good producing animals are necessary for profit and the herd should average between 250 and 300 pounds of butterfat to the cow. If this average is not maintained then the animal is not paying for her feed and should be taken from the herd.

Thinning for Better Fruit

By thinning fall and winter apples, orchardists can improve the size, color, and grade of their fruit, according to specialists in horticulture at the Ohio state university, who declare that the practice does not reduce total yield and increases the amount of No. 1 apples. Other advantages of thinning, declare the specialists, are that tree breakage is reduced, tree vigor is improved, better control of the second brood codling moth can be secured, and all handling costs are lowered.

Mixed Grain Crops

When grain crops are being grown for feed, higher yields and a larger total amount of feeding value per acre may frequently be had by sowing mixtures, instead of sowing one or the other of the grains in the mixture by itself. This is proven by tests at Minnesota university farm over a ten-year period, says A. C. Arny, field crops specialist. A mixture of one bushel of early oats and one bushel of six-row barley yielded higher than oats grown alone.

Alma Mater

The usual pronunciation of alma mater, says Literary Digest, is al-ma me-tar—first a as in fat, second and third a's obscure, as in final, e as in prey. This is based on the older English mode of Latin pronunciation. The so-called Continental system is now largely followed in America in the teaching of Latin, and the Continental values or the vowels have replaced the English values. By the Continental system, the phrase is pronounced al-ma ma-ter—first and third a's as in art, second a and e obscure. One sometimes hears alma pronounced in the English system and mater in the Continental. This mixture is incorrect.
