

Tankage for Dairy Cows

Feeding trials at Kansas State college reveal that tankage is fairly palatable to dairy cows, says Hoard's Dairyman. As high as a pound and a half of tankage has been fed to cows daily. Little difficulty was experienced in getting the animals to consume the tankage when they were started gradually on such feed. A Kansas farmer recently reported that after feeding the tankage for some time in a grain mixture he was able to get the animals to eat as high as two pounds of tankage a day without the necessity of mixing it with the other feed. When animals become accustomed to tankage they seem to develop a craving for this particular feed, which is seen after it has been fed for some time. No apparent effect has been discovered in the flavor of the milk due to the feeding of tankage.

World Wheat Supplies

Production of wheat in the northern hemisphere, not including Russia and China, is about 325,000,000 bushels less than last year, and the crop of the southern hemisphere about 105,000,000 bushels less, according to the government survey, says Wallace's Farmer. The world carryover appears to be about the same as last year. The United States carryover is estimated at 200,000,000 bushels, which, together with the estimated production of 491,000,000 bushels, indicates a domestic supply of 781,000,000 bushels. With a normal domestic utilization of about 625,000,000 bushels, this would leave a carryover next July of about 156,000,000 bushels if there are no net imports or exports.

Farmers Miss Chance

With American farmers scouting around in an effort to locate a cash crop to which they can turn without fear of harmful competitive surpluses, a golden opportunity has been going by the boards. The Department of Agriculture reports that nearly 7,000,000 pounds of red clover seed are imported annually into the United States because growers in this country have failed to meet the demand for this seed.

The department experts believe that the intermountain region would find such a crop highly desirable, not only because it would fill a need of farmers in other parts of the country, but it also would be valuable in restoring and improving the soil on which it is grown.—Washington Star.
