Corn Stover Low Protein Feed and Needs Balance

The loss in dry matter in corn stover approximates 24 per cent while the loss in ensiling corn need not be more than 10 per cent. This emphasizes the value of ensiling in so far as possible this year, says Hoard's Dairyman. However, bright corn stover that has been properly shocked can be made a valuable part of the ration this winter. Shredding, grinding, or cutting may be advisable in order to get the cows to eat the entire plant. Also the conservative use of molasses mixed with water and sprinkled over this roughage may add to its palatability and feeding value slightly.

Corn stover is a low protein feed and to balance it we must feed a high protein grain mixture. We recommend 1 to 2 per cent of the grain mixture be ground limestone, marl, oyster shell, or special steamed bone meal. Bone meal and salt mixed half and half and fed as salt alone is usually fed, will also give the necessary mineral protection. The analysis of corn stover is 2.1 per cent digestible crude protein; 46.1 per cent total digestible nutrients.

Chinch Bug War Hard

Congress in the last session voted an appropriation of a million dollars to halt the ravages of the chinch bug in the corn belt and this money was used to build barriers totalling 30,000 miles along which creosote halted the advance of the insects. The chinch bug, however, has two generations in a single season, the first generation being a crawling insect which can be controlled by the creosote barriers, but the second generation, flying, is not halted by this form of control. Experts estimate that the million dollars spent on control measures saved at least $4,000,000 worth of corn.

Farm Chatter

Spain recently passed several laws to regulate its wheat trade.

Germany has fixed maximum grain prices at slightly above those of 1933.

Tons and tons of Russian thistles—the common tumble weed of the plains, are being conserved as emergency feed for live stock on farms in several sections of Colorado, owing to necessity arising from the drouth.

Agronomists point out that early spring pasture growth may be encouraged by allowing 3 to 5 inches of growth during the fall and fertilizing with a nitrogenous fertilizer early next spring.

In emergency feeding, good corn silage can be substituted for most or all of the hay in the usual dairy ration at the rate of three pounds of silage for one pound of hay.

In the years following the last seven drouths, corn production has risen an average of 49 per cent. Acreage has increased 7 per cent and acre yields 39 per cent.

Dairy Barn Ventilation

We frequently fail to realize that a dairy cow throws off from one to two gallons of water in 24 hours. Consider the amount of moisture produced in the barn by a herd of 20 or more cows, and the great need for proper ventilation and insulation becomes apparent. If this moisture is not carried off it makes a damp and unhealthy atmosphere, greatly lowering the production and disease resistance of the herd, thus increasing their susceptibility to ever present infections.

Insulate Farm Buildings

More and more, farmers are beginning to realize the importance of temperature and humidity control in farm buildings, says the Philadelphia Record. Insulating board, installed at low cost and applied directly over the interior walls, helps correct unsatisfactory conditions. As a lining it conserves animal heat in dairy barns, stables, brooder houses and laying houses. It is also useful as an insulator in ice and milk houses, and for various other purposes.

U. S.-Foreign Trade Routes

Principal trade routes of the United States are from New York to British, French and German ports; Galveston and New Orleans to European ports, this trade consisting chiefly of cotton; by rail to Canada, from San Francisco to the Orient. In addition, there is the heavy coastwise shipping and traffic through the Panama canal.
