feels he is entitled to have in ordinary pleasure as well as food and clothing for himself and family?

How does this business man happen to have an investment which seems to be such a worry to him just because a few timber workers, temporarily without jobs, ask that they have the same treatment that has been given others who are not any more entitled to it?

This business man has his investment because timber workers have spent money with him and because he made a profit on what timber workers spent with him. He ought to be interested in giving aid to men and their families who have made it possible for him to have that investment, besides the relief money no doubt will be spent where this business man has a chance to get some of it. If he is so sore at heart, what does he feel for the taxpayer in other places who will help put up the money that would be spent here to help men who are asking but little from the county and from their employers.

At any rate we are not afraid to sign our names to what we have to say, and this business man evidently has done his best to have the newspapers and county officers to keep his name secret. Now in "Prominent Business Man." Just how prominent are you? And have you the courage to come out from behind the bush, come out in the open, or are you so ashamed of your statements that you care to be hidden from the public.

LETTER DELIVERED "25 MILES FROM C. G."

That others far away may be interested in things that happen around us was illustrated in a letter from Seattle that arrived during the past week addressed to "S. L. Godard, Bohemia, about 25 miles from Cottage Grove."

The writer of the letter had read the story recently published in The Sentinel about a fir tree cut by Mr. Godard that had reached a ripe age but had attained but a small diameter because of the cold climate in the Bohemia mountains. The writer wanted Mr. Godard's address so that some questions could be asked about the tree.

The newspaper story did not give Mr. Godard's address, merely stating that he was cutting timber in the Bohemia district, the timber to be used in mining operations.

Mr. Godard's address has been sent and the list of questions is likely to arrive at any time.
