BEEWAX AND DOUBLOONS

THREE galleons laden with doubloons, bars of gold, and other treasures, setting sail to the south! What a sight they made, as they left port in Panama, heading for the Horn!

But their majestic journey was suddenly cut short. Instead of continuing on their way, rounding the Horn and setting sail for Spain, the three galleons suddenly veered about and began an undignified flight northward.

The reason was not hard to discover: Sir Francis Drake and his British privateers were after the ships of Spain, all sail set to catch up with and capture those three ship-loads of gold. No wonder the galleons fled!

They kept ahead of their pursuers, but could not lose them. Nothing could be done but continue north, far out of the course they had hoped to pursue. On and on they sailed, always dogged by those tenacious Britishers, until at last they ran into a tempest, and in the face of this new danger they forgot their pursuing foes.

The tempest was too much for Drake's ships. They lost heart; gold is a fine thing, but one must live to enjoy it. So they turned back, cheated by wind and wave of the prize they had been hunting. And though they kept a sharp lookout for the return of the Spanish galleons, they never saw them again—nor did anyone else. The three ships full of gold disappeared forever in that mighty tempest.

In 1870 a cave was discovered in Tillamook county, Oregon, which was thought to be the work of some shipwrecked men. The cave had been enlarged with all sorts of tunnels and shafts leading to chambers hidden away from the light.

And the Indians who prowl along the sandy bars nearby sometimes find great pieces of beeswax, which seem to have come from nowhere. But beeswax was a part of the cargo of those three galleons.

So it is thought that somewhere nearby the great ships foundered, and that either under the sea or in some undiscovered chamber of the cave lies that precious cargo of Spanish doubloons and bars of gold. They might try to recover the wealth which her husband had buried so long ago.

They found the mountain, and they found an Indian who owned the ground and who remembered the location of the twisted tree. But, although they searched long and earnestly, they never found the gold.

Speaker Tells of Aid for Blind

Guest entertainers at the Lions' luncheon this noon at the Palace cafe were Dr. D. A. Poling, Albany, who spoke on "Education in Oregon," Miss Uldine Gartin, Eugene, and Miss Lola Howe, who demonstrated a talking book, which is a combination of radio and phonograph for the blind. These books are put out by the American Foundation for the Blind at cost and are obtainable from branch departments in coast cities. The records may be obtained in complete book form or as short articles and poems. An average time for playing one side of a record is fifteen minutes. A Braille book for the blind was also displayed. Miss Gartin gave vocal selections. Dr. H. A. Hagen was in charge of the program and introduced the speakers.

Another good thing about telling the truth is that you do not have to remember what you say.

Some people actually believe their troubles interest other people. Disappointment and discouragement are two different things.

Scientists tell us that the world started in hot water. It seems to be back where it started.
