Thinning Benefit to the Wood Lot

Many Treble Stand of Trees and Provide Fuel
at the Same Time.

By R. B. PARMENTER, Extension Forester, Massachusetts State College.
WNU Service.

Owners of farm woodlots can treble the final value of the stand and at the same time obtain plenty of fuel wood for this winter by following a few simple rules.

The farm wood lot is distinctly an important part of the farm and is capable of producing a steady income. Careful selection of the trees that go into the wood box will save many dollars to the owner of the wood lot through increased value of the remaining trees.

In a fully stocked forest, the final stand will consist of from 100 to 150 trees to the acre. The main object of stand improvement is to select on each acre that many trees of the best form and species and develop them for the final crop. Only a small percentage of stems will ever reach maturity, and it would be a serious mistake to leave only the final number in a growing stand.

Rather the owner should pick out the best species to save, and free them from competition by cutting away a few of the less desirable species. Don't remove anything more than is necessary to accomplish this result. Limit the work to opening a space around the crown of each tree that will close completely within five years.

In uneven-aged stands the valuable species should be released, in land densely stocked with young hardwoods of one to three inches in diameter, selective thinning will promote sound timber production.

Cutting out all dead, defective, and dying trees and those of inferior species is advised. If the work is carefully planned and executed, the wood lot will grow surprisingly.

Screw Worms Reach Corn Belt; Winter Kills Them

The screw worm, one of the most destructive pests of live stock, attacked animals this year in several northern states. Strong flyers, though they are, these insects could never have traveled under their own power so far from the South, where they cause heavy losses among all classes of live stock, according to Dr. F. C. Bishopp of the bureau of entomology and plant quarantine, United States Department of Agriculture. Apparently, Doctor Bishopp says, the pest, in its maggot stage, was carried on infested cattle and sheep shipped North in response to the stimulation of rising meat prices and abundant feed in the corn belt. In this new territory it spread in 14 counties in central, western Illinois, in eastern Missouri, and in southwestern Iowa. There have been more than 7,000 screw worm cases in Illinois and the pest killed about 400 animals there.

Cold always checks the screw worm, even in the South. As the fly is a southern species, it is not likely to survive the winter in the corn belt. An outbreak next year, therefore, need be feared only if infested animals are allowed to come in.

Rogue River Pioneer Passes

Friday, April 10, marked the passing of another early pioneer of the Rogue River valley, with the death of Anson Walker Jacobs, the youngest son of a family of six children, and the last survivor. Born in Lancaster, Iowa, Jan. 13, 1856, Mr. Jacobs married Addie Malissa Handslip July 13, 1875 and emigrated to Oregon via the overland stage from Sacramento, California, locating in Ashland, Ore. in 1876 where 29 years were devoted to raising a family of 7 children, and providing for the same by tilling the soil, and freighting overland, between Ashland and California cities, also between Ashland and Salem before the construction of the railroad.

The family in 1905 left Ashland to locate in the Willamette valley near Creswell, where Mr. Jacobs led an active life until 1920 when he had the sad misfortune to lose the sight of both eyes, the cause of which was assumed to be cedar poisoning.

Some time prior to this sad experience, the family being grown and all married, a separation was effected with Mrs. Jacobs. On April 25, 1923 he married Maude Ann Brown, of English descent, who since has devotedly cared for and attended his needs and care.

Interment at the Riverview cemetery, Portland, followed services Monday, April 13 at Mr. Minville, Ore. Besides the widow, he is survived by the following: two sons, Chalmers B. of Kerry, Ore., and the following daughters, Dora J. De Vere, Kelseyville, California, Deselle Roabaugh, Portland, Ore., Mrs. W. W. Stiffler, Salem, Mrs. Golda G. Lemley, Cottage Grove, as well as 16 grandchildren and 12 great grand children.

B. F. Rinard Dies.

Benjamin Franklin Rinard, 78, formerly a resident of this city, died at his home in Grants Pass Friday, April 10. He was born in Elkhart, Ind., Nov. 10, 1857.

Funeral services were held Monday at 2 p. m. at the L. B. Hall funeral home with burial in Hillcrest cemetery. Surviving are the widow, Mrs. Lou Rinard; five sons, Joseph E. of Medford, Roy C. and Louis F. of Sacramento, James G. of San Francisco, Benjamin F. of Grants Pass; a daughter, Mrs. Walter A. Clark of Baker; three brothers and several grandchildren.

The five sons and a brother, D. A. of Portland, acted as pallbearers.

"Maverick"

It was the practice for a rancher to claim and brand any stray calf found on his own ranch. Because of this the term maverick was converted into a verb, meaning to appropriate without legal claim, and was applied to other things beside cattle. Thus one might be said "to maverick" a mine.

CARD OF THANKS.

We wish to thank all the friends far and near, who so kindly assisted us in our recent terrible sorrow and bereavement due to the sudden death of our beloved mother, Mrs. Clara A. Burkholder. We appreciate also the many messages of condolence and sympathy received, more than we can express. Miss Belle Burkholder. a16p Mr. and Mrs. C. S. Burkholder.
