Spearman's Novel Brought Opening For Screen Star

Frank H. Spearman, author of "Gunlock Ranch," this paper's new serial, is credited with giving the late Wallace Reid his start as a motion picture actor. While in his heyday shortly before death overtook him, Reid said he "rode into fame on the screen with a play by Frank H. Spearman."

In his latest novel, "Gunlock Ranch," the famous Western author has returned to the field of his first literary conquest to gain new recognition as an old-time writer who could "come back." Spearman was born in Buffalo, N. Y., and spent his boyhood in Wisconsin. Orphaned when fifteen years of age, he was forced to leave Lawrence college at Appleton, Wis., and go to work as a salesman for his brother.

Spearman was married to Miss Eugenie Longergan, daughter of the late Thomas Longergan, pioneer Chicagoan. Delicate in health, he went to McCook, Neb., where he started writing while regaining his health. Since that time he has lived in Chicago and Hollywood.

Spearman's railroad short stories occupy a niche of their own in American fiction. Two of them, "Held for Orders" and "The Nerve of Foley," are still in print. "Whispering Smith" is one of his most famous novels, while his outstanding Western books are "Nan of Muscle Mountain," "Laramie Holds the Range," "Selwood of Sleepy Cat" and "Flambeau Jim."

Tom Allen to Start Culp Creek Bus Line

According to plans announced this week Tom Allen of this city will launch a new bus line between Cottage Grove and Culp Creek, with the first run to be made about July 15. Two trips are to be made daily, with the schedule such that men residing in Cottage Grove and employed in Dorena and Culp Creek mills will be able to use the bus service going to and returning from work.

Nearly 30 cars are leaving Cottage Grove daily for Dorena and Culp Creek, Mr. Allen states, and he believes that the saving in transportation costs through bus service will insure the new line good patronage.
