Discoverer of Aluminum
More than 125 years ago a British scientist, Sir Humphry Davy, experimented with a whitish powdery clay called alumina. He tried various ways of turning this clay into metal and finally was successful in producing an alloy of iron and certain ingredients of the clay. He called this alloy aluminum, although it was not the aluminum that we know today.

We believe there is a human side to business, perhaps the son or daughter has made a record in school of which you are proud, or maybe they are engaged or married, or a little one has come into their home or yours, and then the first smile, the first tooth, words or steps, perhaps a birth or wedding anniversary, we like to enjoy them with you, or there might be illness in your home, or the dark angel may have crossed the threshold and left a vacant chair, we can sympathize with you then. We want our store to be known as the friendly one with a human interest in each customer.
