PIG TO PORK BARREL

ON A brisk October day in 1837 a pig belonging to Mrs. Sherman, a good wife of Boston, wandered into the garden of a wealthy and wrathful gentleman named Capt. Robert Keayne, who killed the wandering porker. Mrs. Sherman sued him for damages and lost—in a gentleman's court. She had done a lot of talking, so Keayne sued her for slander. He won again.

Then there was turmoil. Boston rocked with indignation—that part of it composed of the common people.

The case was carried to the legislative assembly, then known as "The Great and General Court." It was composed of the governor, magistrates and deputies from the several towns, but the magistrates, who were gentlemen, although outnumbered, held the balance of power through a rule which said that no act should pass unless approved by the majority of magistrates!

Mrs. Sherman's pig became the symbol of fair play and equal representation for the common people. The controversy raged for seven years. The upshot of it was that, instead of having a single legislative body controlled by a select group as the magistrates desired—or by a majority vote of all, as the deputies desired—Massachusetts got an assembly of two co-ordinate branches. Thus was instituted the system of checks and balances later incorporated in the provisions for our national congress and state legislatures.

So Mrs. Sherman's martyred pig, after a century and a half, found an appropriate sepulcher—in a branch of government often noted for "pork barrel" legislation!

Drivers Observe Laws—No Traffic Arrests

Automobile drivers are observing the traffic regulations of the city, according to Chief of Police G. B. Pitcher, and no traffic arrests have been made since the city started its traffic law enforcement campaign. The drive was aimed primarily at overtime and double parkers along Main street. The city gave offenders two weeks in which to conform to regulations and last week sent out the warning that arrests would be made for violations. Chief Pitcher said that car owners are alert and move their automobiles before he puts the second tire check that means a ticket for a call at police court.
