"Skeet" at Drenner Ranch to Draw Shot Gun Men Sunday

A delegation of local "scattergun artists" who visited the improved skeet grounds at the R. S. Drenner ranch near Culp Creek Sunday found the course with more hazards than a miniature golf course, and decided that to repay themselves for the privilege of missing so many of the elusive blue rocks, that a public shoot should be held at the Drenner ranch Sunday, Jan. 16, in place of the rod and gun club grounds, as originally planned.

The shoot will be informal, sponsored by the local rod and gun club, and operated under their new policy of more fun for less money. Officials of the club who have tried the Drenner traps, report them more sporting and more fun than either regulation trap or skeet. The shoot Sunday will start at 10 a. m. The Drenner ranch is located east of Culp Creek, on the old Disston road.

Snuff-Taking Once Was "Dainty and Elegant"

In 1759, George Washington, a Virginia planter, shipped 55 hogsheads of tobacco to England. When the national capitol was built, tobacco had reached such an important place in American life that its leaves were used on some of the columns, along with corn, another New World product, relates a writer in the Washington Post.

To Sir Walter Raleigh goes the credit for popularizing smoking in the Elizabethan court and so in Europe. School children learn the story of how his servant threw water on him when he began smoking—thinking he was afire.

The spread of the habit, however, was not always clear sailing. King James termed it a filthy weed. Shah Abbas of Persia, fearing its effect upon the birth rate, prohibited the use of tobacco and burned a merchant alive in his stock of the plant. In Connecticut, in 1647, smoking in public was forbidden.

During the fashionable reign of Louis XIII snuff-taking was pronounced "far daintier and more elegant" than "puffing out tobacco smoke."

As late as 1900 cigarettes—a South American invention—were considered too sissy for use by red-blooded Americans.

One of the interesting things about tobacco is that it adapts itself peculiarly to the soil and climate in which it grows.

About Allergy

The Modern Home Medical Adviser defines allergy by saying that the person with allergy is an individual who inherits one peculiar constitutional make-up which causes him to become sensitive to certain things. Thereafter these particular things become violently poisonous to him, even when encountered in minute amounts. Allergy patients may become sensitive not only to material things but also to physical agents such as light, heat or cold. Sensitiveness may develop to such an extreme in certain people that they may be badly affected by a millionth of a milligram of substance which may be devoured as a food by a nonsensitive person. Hay fever, asthma, hives, eczema and other diseases are linked with allergic conditions.

Wrote "Alice in Wonderland"

The author of "Alice in Wonderland" was Charles Lutwidge Dodgson, a young cleric and mathematician, who invented the fantasy in 1862 to please the children of his friend, George Liddell. At their insistence, he continued the incredible adventures of Alice and three years later published them under the name of Lewis Carroll.
