Tremendous Trifles

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

"ON TO RICHMOND!"

EARLY in June, 1861, the editorial column in the New York Tribune declared "THE NATION'S WAR CRY: Forward to Richmond!"

Forward to Richmond!" Composed by Fitz-Henry Warren of the Tribune staff, it was run by order of Charles A. Dana, then managing editor. But every one believed that Horace Greeley had originated it.

Day after day it appeared. Soon the whole North had taken up the cry, "On to Richmond!" By July the government could disregard it no longer.

Gen. Irvin McDowell was ordered to advance with his raw, untrained troops. The result was the battle of Bull Run on July 21 when the Union forces were utterly routed with a loss of nearly 3,000 killed, wounded and missing.

The disaster was a terrible blow to the North. Greeley published a signed statement disclaiming responsibility for the defeat. But he was blamed for it, nevertheless. His bitter enemy, James Gordon Bennett of the Herald, said that the Tribune editor should be tried for murder because he had sent all those brave young boys to their death. Greeley was so overwhelmed by it all that he was prostrated for six weeks with an attack of brain fever.

Later he rose to heights of editorial influence perhaps never equaled by any other man. But by many Americans he is still remembered as the editor whose slogan precipitated a great disaster to our arms and to our pride.
