Plant Zones by Altitude

In the Grand Canyon of Arizona four distinct climatic and plant zones have been produced by the extreme variations in altitude from the canyon floor to the north rim.

Maoris Believe "Tiki,"

Stone Charm, Fools Evil

The Maori population, of which there are 50,000 in New Zealand, is civilized to an extent where they can send intelligent representatives to the local parliament. Nevertheless, they cling religiously to their old superstitions. One of these is their faith in the power of the "tiki," the green stone charm which they believe will ward off all evil. The stone is of small value, so even the poorest may provide themselves with it.

As the stone is soft and easily worked, the Maoris usually cut it into grotesque figures, or heads, with eyes boldly open and tongue sticking out in defiance, or derision, the idea being to frighten away anything that might be harmful.

The women wear these charms on chains around their necks, and no native woman is considered fully dressed without wearing this superstitious challenge to fear.

Like other South Sea Islanders, according to a writer in the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, the Maoris believe in the tapu, or tabu. They are taught not to do or touch things that are forbidden, and if the tabu is broken the transgressor suffers great agony of mind. Natives have died in fear and convulsions after learning that they had eaten some food that was forbidden.

The earth around Roaturo is kind to the Maori housewives. There are numerous fireless cookers—fishers in the ground that are filled with water bubbling at the boiling point or steam holes, almost as hot as the kitchen range. Thus they do not even have to gather wood to build fires.

Taylor Asserted He Was

Not Fit to Be President

James H. Beard, the Ohio-bred artist, who devoted more than 60 years to wielding the palette and brush, once while painting a portrait of Gen. Zachary Taylor told the militarist that he was very much opposed to his nomination to the presidency. Although born in Buffalo in 1814, Beard spent his boyhood in Painesville and a number of years in his studio in Cincinnati.

While on a journey down the Mississippi to New Orleans, relates a writer in the Cleveland Plain Dealer, he stopped at Baton Rouge, La., to paint a large, almost life-size portrait of General Taylor, who was at the time foremost among the Whig possibilities for nomination to the presidency.

While at work on the portrait one day, Beard said to the man who had distinguished himself in the Black Hawk war, the Seminole campaign, and the Mexican war: "General, I will vote for you, but under protest. I never knew you as a statesman, and I am not certain that a military man is qualified for the office."

Without wincing, General Taylor smiled and replied: "You are right. I am no more fit to be President than you are. Don't vote for me."

Kilkenny Cats

Inhabitants of the Irish city of Kilkenny are sometimes jokingly referred to as "Kilkenny Cats." Here is one story of the origin of the nickname, according to London Answers Magazine. During the Irish rebellion of 1798, Kilkenny was garrisoned by a troop of Hessian soldiers who amused themselves by tying two cats together by their tails and throwing them across a clothesline to fight. The authorities decided to stop this "sport," but when the officer on duty approached, a trooper cut off the tails with his sword and the cats bolted. When the officer asked for an explanation of the tails, he was told the cats had fought till nothing was left but their tails. This may be a fable, but it is fact that the municipalities of the district quarreled so bitterly about their boundaries that they impoverished themselves, leaving only "two tails" behind.

William Penn's Children

William Penn had seven children by his first wife and seven by his second, a total of 14. Of the children by the first marriage only two survived, a daughter, Letitia, and a son, William. The children of the second marriage were John, Thomas, Hannah Margaritta, Margaret, Richard, Dennis and Hannah. Richard Penn, Sr., (1705-71) became joint proprietary governor with his brothers, John and Thomas Penn, but paid very little attention to the colony. Thomas Penn, second son of the founder by his second wife (1702-1775), was in the colony from 1732 to 1741 and was active in its administration. Richard Penn, Jr., a grandson of the founder (1735-1811), was deputy governor of the province from 1771 to 1773 and a warm supporter of the Colonists in the Revolution.
