

Tremendous Trifles

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

THIRST

IT WAS hot that day along the road to Palos in the Spanish province of Andalusia. The dust eddied and swirled around the hoofs of a little white mule and arose in a choking cloud around his rider. He was Cristobal Colon.

Ahead of him, the mariner saw the walls of a monastery . . . Santa Maria de la Rabida. Surely the good friars there would give a thirsty traveler a drink of water!

They would, indeed! So he drank several cupsful of the refreshing fluid. Between drinks Joan Perez, officiating guardian of the monastery, listened to the stranger's tale of thwarted ambition. He wanted to sail West across the Sea of Mystery. He had sought the aid of Ferdinand and Isabella, rulers of Spain. But they had refused.

By and by the disheartened sailor rode away. He did not know that Juan Perez was the confessor of the queen, nor what a deep impression he had made upon the friar with his tale of vast ambitions. But he soon found out. For Perez's eloquent pleading in the Genoese sailor's behalf convinced Isabella.

And so it came about that the thirst of Christopher Columbus on that hot summer day along the road to Palos sent him sailing at last across the Atlantic to immortality as the discoverer of America.

Business Brides Set the Styles

The crop of "business brides" is larger in 1938 than ever before. And more than ever before, they are setting the styles in weddings. One thing they are doing which their stay-at-home sisters may well emulate is to send out smartly processed Wedding Announcements instead of taking the time to write personal notes or spending hours on the phone.

Virginia Courtenay, popular California feminine consultant, covers this and many other interesting details in her 1938 edition of "SO YOU ARE GOING TO BE MARRIED." Recent brides and brides-to-be are invited to call at our office for a gift copy.

Travel Prospects Good

Volume of tourist travel in the Pacific Northwest during 1938 looks as if it will be the heaviest, perhaps the greatest in years, predicts Edward V. "Bobbie" Burns, newly appointed district sales manager for Standard Oil company of California. Burns, left, discusses with R. H. Baldock, Oregon state highway engineer, the network of fine highways that make it easy for visitors to see the many scenic attractions.
