

Noted Speakers On Grange Program

When the National Grange opens its 72nd annual session at Portland, Oregon, Wednesday morning, November 16, and continuing for nine days, its program will contain a noteworthy list of speakers who are the leaders in agriculture, as well as in various other directions having important bearing on the farmer's welfare. It is significant that each year the National Grange is able to bring to its annual session conspicuous figures in national life, and the coming Portland event is no exception.

Among those whose presence is promised at the grange convention are Henry A. Wallace, national secretary of agriculture, and M. L. Wilson, assistant secretary; F. F. Hill, governor of the national Farm Credit Administration; Samuel D. Sanders, cooperative bank commissioner and Albert S. Goss, federal land bank commissioner; John M. Carmody, director of rural electrification; and George N. Peck, widely-known economist. United States Senator Charles L. McNary, Congressman Walter M. Pierce and Governor Charles Martin of Oregon, and many others prominent in the agricultural and educational leadership of the Pacific coast states, will also be included.

The above speakers will be heard from time to time, interspersing the regular business session programs of the National Grange convention, and the delegates will especially welcome Albert S. Goss, federal land bank commissioner, who was for many years Master of the Washington state grange and chairman of the executive committee of the National grange.

The special meetings of the Oregon State Grange covering all parts of that state for the purpose of conferring the sixth degree are reported to be largely attended, with good-sized classes in every instance—all looking forward to the great day of the entire national convention—Friday, November 18—when the conferring of the seventh degree, which is the high point in Grange ritualism, will occupy the full day and be staged in the beautiful Municipal Auditorium at Portland, with both afternoon and evening classes. The total number of initiates is expected to reach 6,000, coming chiefly from the Pacific Coast states, supplemented by patrons who will travel across the continent on the coast-to-coast special train, which the National Grange will run from Boston and New York to Portland and return, a charming scenic itinerary having been arranged.
