State Allotment Of Wheat Acreage Is Up 10 Percent

Oregon's 1940 wheat allotment will be 851,458 acres, Will Steen of Milton, chairman of the state AAA farm program committee has announced. This allotment is 10 per cent larger than that received by Oregon for 1939.

The increase in the state allotment is in line with the increase in the national wheat allotment announced recently by the Agricultural Adjustment Administration. The national allotment for 1940 is 62 million acres, seven million acres larger than the 1939 allotment.

Steen asserted that these acreage allotments represented "goals" and that farmers cooperate only on a voluntary basis in an effort to hold wheat production down to these levels.

Wide participation of farmers in Oregon and other wheat-producing states with the AAA farm program this year contributed substantially to the adjustment in wheat supplies and the resulting larger allotments for 1940, Steen said.

The state allotment soon will be divided up on a county basis, after which county AAA committees will apportion the county allotments among individual farmers. The state allotment was confirmed almost two months earlier than last year, said Steen, which will make it possible for farmers to have their allotments well in advance of the winter wheat planting season.

"By planting within their 1940 wheat acreage allotments," Steen pointed out, "Oregon farmers will cooperate with other farmers of the nation in balancing wheat acreage with needs for the immediate future. The national allotment is based on the acreage necessary to provide for our domestic markets, our export trade, and a reserve for any emergency which may arise."

The wheat allotment for a farm is the basis for the farmer's participation in all phases of the national program including conservation payments, price adjustment payments, wheat loans, and crop insurance.

W. C. MARTIN JR. INJURED IN ACCIDENT

W. C. Martin Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Martin, was painfully but not critically injured when hooked by a milk cow Sunday afternoon at the Benton Schrenk farm. The lad received a wound when the cow, trying to get to a dog, knocked him down and tore the skin from under his arm-pit with a horn. Gordon Schrenk, his companion, was more fortunate. Gordon came out of the melee minus his pants, but otherwise none the worse for his experience.

BUILDS FENCE AGAINST CRICKETS

Crook county, Wyoming, farmers are preparing against an invasion of the Mormon cricket by erecting a tin fence that saved a large area three years ago. At that time farmers and ranchers built a tin fence a mile long and an inch high, against which the crickets spread and are killed by poison and by sticks. This year numbers of farmers are erecting their own fence.

CHERRY SPILL

Seven tons of cherries were spilled in Salem Thursday night as a truck from The Dalles, driven by D. H. Gordon, collided with a car within a block of the destination of the truck and critically injured Lin Mulkins.

The Prof. an' I speak the same language

There's one thing I like about this business—you never know who's comin' in next. But I never before met one like ol' Prof. Wright from over at the University—he's a whizz.

"Professor," I says, while fillin' his tank with Super-Shell, "this Golden Shell Oil cuts engine wear where most of it happens—on cold starts."

"Ah," says he, "high fluidity at low temperature, I take it—or to put it more simply, an accelerated velocity of flow from the reservoir to the reciprocating and revolving parts."

"Which?" (I gulp a little.)

"Yes, yes—I remember reading all the details recently—one of your research people reporting to a scientific journal, I think."

"You mean you already know Golden Shell is fast-flowin'? You know how it gets up into the engine quick when you start your motor?"

"Quite," answers the Prof., "and I seem to recall the mention of certain economies..."

"Oh, you mean the price? Well, it's only 25¢ a quart, Professor." (I'm gettin' more confident now.)

"Then, under the circumstances, I feel, as my students say, 'I shall go for it in a big way!'"

And he went. A complete oil change!

Sincerely,

Your Shell Dealer
