

1939 Motor Cruise: To Lake Louise

"Banff and Lake Louise have long borne a reputation as catering chiefly to the financial and social elite. . . . They now offer to the American tourist accommodations suited to every taste and pocketbook."

This newspaper is co-operating with the Oregon State Motor association and The Oregonian in presenting a series of motorlogs designed to stimulate travel in Oregon and the Pacific northwest. This article was condensed from a full page article appearing in The Oregonian June 25.

Close on the heels of royalty, The Oregonian-Oregon State Motor association tour party reached the Canadian Rockies—a realm of challenging beauty and one of attractive mystery for most Americans.

Two barriers have up to this time fairly effectively blocked any widespread travel from the Pacific northwest into the Banff-Lake Louise area.

1. Poor roads.
2. It had been oversold as a rich man's paradise.

Happily, this group of travel counselors from Oregon found that neither obstacle longer has any essential merit.

In the last five years Alberta, grown tourist conscious, has sought to hasten its road program.

Although several gaps remain to be bridged—and much will be done early this summer—and although some mileage is not yet dustless, the main highways in Alberta may be traveled with reasonable comfort and speed.

Banff and Lake Louise have long borne a reputation as catering chiefly to the financial and social elite. The average resident of Oregon would probably voice the opinion that at least a modest fortune would be required for even a short visit at this justly famous resort.

Whether entirely true in the past or not, the facts are that Banff and Lake Louise now offer to the American tourist accommodations suited to every taste and pocketbook. Motor cabins, tourist inns and luxury hotels are available at prices comparable to those one would expect to pay for similar appointments in this country.

Crossing the boundary presents no considerable inconvenience; the distance—with modern highways and motor cars—no great deterrent.

If the cost of a trip to Banff and Lake Louise has been overemphasized in the past, the scenery has not. It is one of the few places where every expectation excited by preliminary literature was fulfilled. You can believe what you have heard about the Canadian Rockies.

A strange sense of serenity is experienced by those who view these snow-crowned peaks.

It is as if the mightiness of nature had dwarfed and minimized transient troubles. The strength and endurance of the glacier hung crags, the peaceful valleys, the dashing ice-fed streams, the crystalline lakes and the primeval forest seem to offer complete security—to shut out strife and provide composure.

It is difficult for one to explain this reaction but no one who has been there will doubt its reality.

Last week this motor expedition of scenic rediscovery was traced through Montana to Great Falls. At Browning two members were adopted by the Blackfeet Indians. Glacier park, not then open, was touched briefly but Waterton Lakes, a scenic gem, was already alive with activity.

The party proceeded to Banff by way of Calgary and swung back home via Radium Hot Springs, Cranbrook, Spokane and Grand Coulee dam.

President Louisiana University Is Sought On Fund Shortage

A federal investigation into the income of Dr. James Monroe Smith was revealed Monday while state police sought him for questioning on an alleged shortage of several hundred thousand dollars in school funds.

Smith resigned as president of the Louisiana State university Sunday.

Policemen had orders to bring Dr. Smith back "in handcuffs" for a hearing before the East Baton Rouge parish grand jury.

Leche, who had planned to resign Monday because of illness and turn the governorship over to Lieut. Earl K. Long, younger brother of the late Huey P. Long, postponed his resignation. He said he would stay on and see that Dr. Smith got justice.

The university, widely known for its magnificent buildings, football teams, cadet corps and vast land holdings, was Huey Long's school of revenge. He developed it with state funds to compete with Tulane university, which had refused him an honorary degree.

The policemen boarded and searched trains during the night at Plaquemine and Addis, in the swamp country where Dr. Smith was reported to have gone. Dr. Smith was not on either train, however, and the searchers went back into the swamps.

Resignation Asked
Leche and Earl Long both said that Dr. Smith had fled. His resignation, they said, came at Leche's request.

Solution

Sandy, Jr., it seems was in difficulties. In a moment of weakness he had loaned a friend $500 without benefit of written receipt. In desperation, he consulted his father.

Father (considering): "That's easy, me lad. Write him and say you need the $1,000 instantly."

Sandy, Jr.: "You mean the $500."

Father: "That I do not. You say $1,000 and he will write back that he only owes you $500. Then you will have it in writing."—Typo Graphic.
