GOLDEN PHANTOMS

Fascinating Tales of Lost Mines

BY EDITH L. WATSON

© W. S.

THE DENTAL GOLD FIND

EARLY this year an ex-service man named Charles Williams became lost in Superstition mountain, site of the "Lost Dutchman" mine and mecca of treasure-hunters. When he finally made his way out of the mazes in which so many men have been forever lost, he brought with him a dozen pieces of gold, and claimed that he had found a cache containing some twenty pounds of the metal.

Assays showed one of the "nuggets" to be what is known as "dental gold"—an alloy of gold, copper, and a trace of platinum.

As this is written, Williams has not been able to find the cache, but believes that he will discover it again. If all the gold proves to be alloy, it will add another mystery to the many already accumulated about Superstition.
