NEW FACES

Store fronts are being modernized in the United States at the rate of 85,000 a year, the government estimates. Merchandising experts attribute this record to recognition by today's merchants that a retail store is like a package. When confronted with two or more similar articles, identically priced, consumers generally choose the package most attractively wrapped. It's fairly simple, these days, for a storekeeper to obtain advance facts about cost and design for modernization, to put his whole store "in an attractive package." Before even approaching a prospective customer, a glass jobbing firm in Minneapolis equips its salesmen with colored sketches of vitrolite glass fronts so that a merchant may see for himself how effectively a "face-lifting" would attract new customers to his store. The salesman also has records showing how, after modernization, business has improved for merchants in other cities.

WHILE EXPLANATIONS ARE IN ORDER

Charges have been made that county employes have been using county gasoline for private purposes and we understand the charges have been admitted by some of the county employes, resolutions have been passed by some members of the county court criticizing such practices, although not all of the members of the county court signed the resolution.

How much politics, if any, is behind the expose we have now of knowing. Graft, even in petty matters, is bad enough, but worse where huge sums are involved and where the perpetrators are smooth enough to cover up wholesale stealing of public funds or public property. Using county gasoline for private purposes might eventually amount to a considerable sum, although from information available at the present time, the amount of county gasoline used for private purposes is a small sum compared with racketeering practiced in some sections of the county in years passed.

There are lots of things we would like to know, but maybe never will. As citizens we should be interested in stopping not only the various forms of corruption, but useless and needless expenditures as well. We would like to know, for instance, why the government is spending a million dollars or so building a power line into Eugene from Bonneville without any contracts for the power once the line is completed. This and other phases of the development of Bonneville may not be criminal, but certainly good judgment in spending huge sums of money to build power lines without knowing what is to be done with the line once it is completed, is open to question.

HITLER YOUTH GETTING WHAT THEY CRAVE

(Oregon Voter.)

"Hitler asked himself, 'What is it that young people really want?' and he found and applied the answer: 'They desire to see and be a part of what is being done in the world.'" So in the rough said F.L. Redefers, N. Y. city educator at N. W. Affairs Institute, Reed College. "How long will democracies endure unless they find the right answer to this question and apply it with some degree of success?"

"In Japan I saw trains crowded with school children, taking 10-day trips to see their country, its shrines, its places of historic interest and its hives of economic activity.

"In Russia, the government assists, subsidizes and organizes the participation by city children in agricultural and industrial activities. They are not only taken out to the farms, but they assist in harvest; they not only make field trips to the great dams, but part of their education is in actual work in industry.

"Italy also is bringing youth into active realization that it is a part of nationality instead of being merely a student without participation.

"France and Great Britain are shifting educational method into field trips and surveys. In England the School Journeys Association has been formed and it conducted field trips in which some 30,000 children participated, 11,000 on the continent.

"In the United States there is a tendency towards progress in this line and it should be encouraged. This year it is noted principally in school class trips to the New York and San Francisco fairs. And we can note it almost daily in Girl Scout, Boy Scout and Y.M.C.A. hikes and camping.

"There still exists in the United States the idea that trips are to be given as an award to the best students or as a prize in a contest. This is unsound; participation should be universal instead of selective if we wish to have the powers of democracy exercised with information and understanding by those who will have the vote and the responsibility.

"Antioch College had the excellent idea of mingling participation with study. Part of each year the student went into a job. They were doing it instead of just talking about it. This gave a maturity valuable as a product of education.

"Sarah Lawrence School sends students to the metropolis to participate in surveys and activities. 'I have seen, experienced and been a part of...'

"We are getting away from reliance on school books. Education at first was in doing it; as it became organized into formal education, it became vicarious just reading about it instead of doing it. Observation must be encouraged, not directed so its edge will not be dulled. Sensitize our young people in awareness.

"Mexico sends its students of teaching away from its education schools for six months at a time to live among the people in some distant part and learn by living in conditions which later must be faced in teacher experience. To really understand a region, you can't get it out of a book or merely by making pictures of it.

"Democracy must make our education as efficient as is education in fascist countries if it is to bring youth into its affairs by participation from childhood instead of by sudden introduction for which preparation is detached from reality. That is, if democracy is to survive."

Crop Prospects Have Improved; Prices Are Less Favorable Now

Some improvement in general crop prospects in the country as a whole has occurred during recent weeks, accompanied by somewhat less favorable farm price trends, according to information given in a report on the agricultural situation just released by the agricultural extension service at Oregon State college. Late crops were helped by favorable weather, but early crops such as wheat, oats, barley, rye and probably hay, will not yield so well owing to unfavorable growing conditions early in the season.

The general farm price level in the country as a whole is scarcely as high as a year ago, although the Oregon index is somewhat higher. The general economic situation continues to indicate relatively stable demand conditions for farm products, according to the report, indicating that farm price trends may depend considerably upon the supply of the various commodities.

On the whole, the production of all crops combined is expected to fall considerably below the bumper output of 1937 and even somewhat below 1938. Total fruit production will probably be above average and potato production may be about average, judging from present prospects. Considering carry-over stocks as well as 1939 production, supplies of practically all farm products are expected to be quite ample, both for food purposes and for animal feeding operations.

The report contains much information regarding the prospective supply and current prices of various farm products of commercial importance in Oregon, including wheat and rye, feed grains, hay, potatoes, hops, beans, flaxseed, sugar beets, apples, pears, prunes, and other fruits, nuts, forage crop seeds and various animal products. The report is available free from county agricultural agents.

Bull Gives Chase

The family of Mrs. Norah Gore of San Diego, California, who visited here last week, had a very unpleasant experience while here. The house on their farm being vacant they decided to board up the windows. While going to the house a bull that was in the field gave chase. They reached the house safely, but the bull would not go away, and kept butting the house, which is a small two-room structure, first at one corner then another. Mrs. Gore was sure the house would be overturned. After being imprisoned more than an hour the small grandson slipped out the back while the bull was at the front, and got down over the hill and ran for help. Axel Berggren, owner of the bull, and C. H. Woods and son Robin succeeded in getting the animal away.

Clothing merchant's son asked him to define ethics. "Vell, I will show you," said the father. "Suppose a lady comes into the store, buys a lot of goods, and pays me ten dollars too much when she goes out. Then ethics comes in. Should I or should I not tell my partner."

Efforts are being made in Lakeview to raise $50,000 for an oil test well in that locality.
