Bermuda Was 'Mistortune'

One hundred and fifty-five years ago there appeared the following advertisement in the Bermuda Gazette which would indicate that all who arrive on these enchanted islands are not entirely satisfied with their luck. "Thomas Ker takes this method of informing the Gentlemen of Bermuda, that he has had the misfortune to be cast on the island."

Earth's Leading Races

There are six great races in the world, with a total population of 1,648,000,000. The Mongolian race has the largest population, with 656,000,000, and the Caucasian next, with 645,000,000, while the others in their order are: Negro, 190,000,000; Semitic, 81,000,000; Malayan, 52,000,000, and the Indian, 22,000,000.

How U. S. Printing Started

Stephen Daye (about 1594-1668) came to Massachusetts in 1638 under contract to the Rev. Samuel Glover, who brought along a printing press, but himself died on the voyage. Daye set up the press in Cambridge and there in 1639 issued as a broadside "The Freeman's Oath," the first piece of printing in the Colonies.

More Windmills Than Trees

The Island of Oland, off the coast of Sweden, is today a second "windmill land." Windmills dot the cliffs along its coast, and in the interior, which is level and rather bare, they actually outnumber the trees. The island itself is a favorite resort of the Swedish people.
