DeAutremont Bros. Are Refused Parole

SALEM, Ore.—The three deAutremont brothers, Roy, Ray and Hugh, serving life sentences for the 1923 Siskiyou tunnel robbery and the murder of four trainmen made a routine appearance before the state parole board last week. Parole authorities revealed Friday.

They were not given any hope.

When the new parole board went into office on June 14 they started with the oldest inhabitants of the prison and will continue working through the inmate population, examining the records of each convict for their files. The board is now working the convict number 12,000 division.

Warden George Alexander said that Ray, the twin brother of Roy and Hugh, youngest of the bandit trio, had done all the talking during the parole board's examination of their case, while Roy sat glumly saying nothing.

None of the deAutremonts, whose crime has been labelled the most vicious in modern times and whose capture came after a world-wide search of three years, is eligible for parole.

Those serving life sentences on murder charge or habitual criminals have no parole prerogatives and can be pardoned or have their sentences shortened only by direct action of the governor.

Warden Alexander said, "there is nothing out of the ordinary in the parole board's inspection. It was merely routine, signifying nothing. The board flatly turned down their request for release."

Federal charges for tampering with the mails are still hanging over the brothers and a standing warrant for their arrest is held at the penitentiary to be served at any time they might be released.
