

Douglas Co. Lake To Get Searun Fish

Approximately 1,219,345 eggs have been taken to date by the state game department from less than 20,000 adult native sea-run cutthroat trout held at the Alsea trout hatchery. This supply of brood trout, the only one of its kind in Oregon, has been developed through careful selection and was recently reported by Dr. Fred J. Foster, regional director of the U. S. Bureau of Fisheries, to be the largest and finest stock of adult native cutthroat trout in existence.

The commission plans to rear cutthroat brood trout at the Alsea hatchery for the purpose of stocking Eel lake in Douglas and Coos counties, which is being acquired for development as a cutthroat brood lake and from which it is hoped that it will eventually be possible to secure enough eggs to supply the needs of the coast hatcheries.

Game Management

The United States forest service has been making game estimates for a number of years, states assistant regional forester L. H. Douglas, Portland, Oregon.

"Game management," Douglas said, "is a kind of animal husbandry. A deer, like a cow, needs a certain amount of summer and winter forage. Over-population and under-population usually is shown by forage conditions as well as by numbers."

The first surveys were based wholly upon the judgment of local forest officers. They were, however, the only game population estimates that were made, and aroused much interest. Recent surveys, made by more intensive methods, show that the earlier estimates tended to be too low.

Game surveys are made by several methods adapted to the season and the type of country. If two feet or more of snow are on the ground, deer concentrate in small areas and do not move around much. The enumerator can come close and make a fairly accurate count. Strips may be run to cover average conditions and the game counted. The density of the strip is applied to the whole area. In the spot method, representative spots receive a 100 per cent count by gridironing them or by driving the game past the enumerators. The figures are applied to the whole unit. A less accurate method is to divide the unit into watersheds or sections, and in each division get the information from trappers, residents, records kept during the season, and other sources. Airplanes are used to count game in open country and to locate concentration areas.

Where serious over-population exists, a detailed survey is made, which includes all factors such as condition of forage plants, a summer and winter range, disease, parasites, sex ratios, shedding and growth of antlers, and breeding seasons.

DOINGS AT O. S. C.

Of interest to those students who are thinking of working their way through college is the fact that Fairview house, a new co-op for girls this year at O.S.C., gained second place on the campus for grade average for the term just ended. Their house average was 2.82, next to the 2.89 won in the sorority class. Besides the small amount of work required at the house most of the girls work elsewhere. Ilene Trunnell of Cottage Grove is president of Fairview. Miss Trunnell has just resigned as editor of "Westminster Chimes," published at Westminster House, Presbyterian and Congregational student center, as she thinks one year is enough in that position.
