Here and There

Tom Cox, journalist student who did a good job of pinch hitting at the Sentinel office while the publisher was away, is rather versatile. He can serve either the lumber or the newspaper profession and just now he is doing the former, down around Drain.

In many sections of the United States, particularly the sections where cherries are grown, tourists are offered cherry cider in season. Here where so many of the cherries go to waste, why would not cherry cider go over in a big way. The cider could be refrigerated so that it could be served all summer and would provide another outlet for the surplus crop in this section of the country.

And speaking of ways and means of disposing of surplus fruits and vegetables, we understand there may be offered here shortly a new method of preserving berries by freezing. Whether it will be much different from the refrigeration offered by the locker box, we were unable to learn, but according to reports, hope is held that the new method may enable growers to dispose of more fruit.

Calls for rent houses are becoming more frequent in recent weeks and The Sentinel is glad to do all it can toward getting the newcomers located. Only trouble of it is that we have not had rent houses enough listed to go around. If rent prices could be stabilized, this would be an inducement to get more houses built. Property owners might be persuaded to either modernize or build new homes and where new homes are built the home now occupied might be released for a rent house.

THINGS TO WATCH FOR

A combination pocket mirror and miniature flashlight for lady's pocketbook. It makes nose powdering easier at night. . . Now on the market is an automatic blueprinting machine which is said to turn out in an hour as many blueprints as are turned out in a day by present reproduction methods. . . A "cold" locker for home or small store; sub-zero temperatures are maintained at a cost of only a dollar a month, enabling housewives to quick freeze and keep a streamlined "barrel of food on tap. . . With the coming of stratoliners (airplanes that travel at high altitudes), a pen company has brought out a fountain pen that will not burst at high altitudes. . . Seedless vegetables. Experiments in the University of Michigan laboratories reveal that progress is being made in this direction with peppers, squash, cucumbers and tomatoes.
