Fish Problems Are Being Studied

A thorough study of fresh water game fish problems in Oregon is being conducted by Dr. H. S. Davis of Washington, D. C., who is in charge of agricultural investigations for the U. S. fish and wild life service.

Dr. Davis, one of the world's most noted fish biologists and pathologists, is being assisted by Dr. P. R. Needham of Stanford University, who is in charge of similar work on the Pacific coast.

The present study, according to Dr. Davis, will include fish hatcheries, artificial cultivation of fish, fish management and planting of fish, together with stream surveys. It is probable that Dr. Davis will be in Oregon for two or three weeks, after which he will go to the state of Washington for a 10-day period.

Upon the conclusion of his Oregon investigation, including visits and studies of all hatcheries operated by the Oregon State Game commission, Dr. Davis will advise the commission as to any changes or improvements he deems necessary in the interest of improved fish culture.

Dr. Davis announced that a biological station has been established at the old Clackamas fish hatchery with Reed Nielson, biologist, in charge for work in this region. The work of this station will be carried on in cooperation with the Oregon State Game commission and the U. S. forest service.
