First Lighthouses

The earliest lighthouses of which there are records were the towers built by the Libyans and the Cushites in Lower Egypt, beacon fires being maintained in some of them by the priests. The famous Pharos of Alexandria was built by Sostratus in the reign of Ptolemy II and was regarded as one of the wonders of the world. The name Pharos became the general term for all lighthouses, and the term pharology has been used for the science of lighthouse construction.

Bathing in Bygone Days

Our ancient ancestors who lived in warm and temperate climates evidently discovered the soothing effects of bathing much sooner than their northern neighbors. Among the Hebrews, foot baths were symbols of hospitality while Greeks, Romans, and Egyptians enjoyed bathing even before the pleasure of soap and water washing was known.

Safe Flying Device
Among the newest devices for safe flying, is a single unit "fuel-analyzer" which tests the exhaust gas and indicates the fuel-air ratio on the plane's instrument panel.

Mexican Plumed Serpent
The plumed serpent of the Aztecs of Mexico was a combination of bird and snake and represented the god Quetzalcoatl, "lord of air and earth."
