The stork is a most unusual freak. With long skinny legs and a helluva beak; He builds his nest in chimney pots, And very seldom calls his shots; He wades around to save his wings And gets the blame for lots of things.

Elk Hunting Opens On November 1st

The last of the 1940 big game seasons opens on November 1st with the bull and cow elk season in northeastern Oregon and continues through November 16. Cow elk may be shot only if the hunter possesses one of the special cow elk tags, 2,000 of which were sold by the Oregon State Game commission.

Elk territory embraces all of Union, Umatilla, Grant, Morrow and Baker counties and a portion of Walla Walla county. The cow elk territory does not embrace the entire bull elk area.

All hunters planning to indulge in elk hunting are warned that tags are necessary for both cow and bull elk. All hunters are required to check in and also out of the elk territory. Checking out is a requisite even though the hunter has not bagged an elk.

Sixteen regular and eight special checking stations will open at noon on October 30. Hours for the regular stations will be from 7 a. m. until 9 p. m. Special stations will be operated at the convenience of the occupant, although in most cases the same hours will be observed in the special stations as are announced for the regular ones.

Regular stations will be located at LaGrande, Enterprise, Pendleton, Ukiah, Pilot Rock, Heppner, Milton, Long Creek, Dale, North Powder, Sumpter, Seneca, John Day, Baker, Troy and Blue Mountain Ranger station. Special stations will be found at Starkey, Union, Unity, Prairie City, Juntura, Drewsey, Burns and Halfway.

Before being allowed to enter any hunting area, each hunter will be checked to determine if he has sufficient ropes to hang up a carcass after it has been quartered, adequate skinning knives, hatchet or ax and shovel, together with a vehicle of sufficient carrying capacity to transport any elk killed.

The official hunting synopsis issued by the commission contains a map of the bull and cow elk territory, together with all regulations concerning elk season. Sanitary regulations will be enforced throughout the elk area and sportsmen are warned that it is necessary to maintain a clean camp and leave it in good condition.

PROPERTY RATIO LESS

The ratio of assessment of Lane county property to the cash value of the property is fifty-three percent, one percent under that of 1939, according to an estimate made by the state tax commission, a letter received by Assessor Welby Stevens revealed. The ratio over the county has been fifty-four percent since 1933. All counties except two show a decrease from one to three percent, indicating that the price of property has increased more rapidly than the assessment.
