

35 Percent Labor Listed in Lane Co.

Nearly 35 per cent of the Lane county employers have complied with the request of the board for mobilization of labor for the listing of men skilled in 370 defense industrial operations.

In the state as a whole about 30 per cent of the employers have completed their surveys, which shows Lane county to be a trifle above the state average.

Here in the Cottage Grove area—southern Lane county—the employers are doing well in getting in their reports. However, there are some who have not as yet done so, and the local committee is hoping that they will submit their reports to the board promptly, in order that this district may attain the desired 100 per cent.

It is interesting to note from the returns of about one-third of Oregon's 10,000 principal concerns, it is disclosed that thousands of workers employed in other lines are qualified to return to their primary trades to aid in speeding up defense production.

This fact proves more conclusively than ever how vital a step this completion of Oregon's skilled labor inventory will be in the national defense program.

Here and There

Tom Gunderson, Chevrolet salesman, is looking for at least two more victims in the market for a used car and he must find them quick, else he can't qualify for a prize in the form of a good duck shooting shotgun. Gunderson and Maulding have been serving hot duck soup to prospective customers all this fall and Gunderson is in need of more ducks, which he thinks he could get with a good shotgun and to get this gun he's been combing the countryside, even poking in every likely looking hole, trying to scare up a few prospective customers.

According to rumors, Bill Halde-man and Lyman Adams propose to show the first aid classes a thing or two in demonstrations. Allegedly they propose to demonstrate how one may pick a sliver out of his big toe without undue groaning or noise making.

As a newsman we've never been short on asking questions, but as yet we have never worked up the courage to ask the why of the squirrel tails on car radiator caps and radio aerials. First we think of squirrels, then of nuts.—John E. Dowell in the Adrian (Mo) Journal.

Here it is—the last of November—and our new mayor still clinging to last season's combination of red tie and brown gravy.

Having donned our red flannel loggies against the cold blasts of old man winter, we signed a protective agreement with the Collins laundry last Friday. We agreed to send back all their pins if, and as when they return all our buttons.

There was a young lady named Perkins, Who was very fond of green gherkins, She ate them with spice And thought they were nice, But they pickled her internal workin's.

Quicksilver Output Ahead Last Year

According to United States Bureau of Mines' monthly mercury release dated November 2, 1940, domestic production of mercury in September amounted to approximately 3,600 flasks, an increase of 100 flasks over August and 400 flasks over the July production. Domestic consumption was reported to have totaled about 2,100 flasks, so that the output of domestic mines was in excess of domestic requirements and allowed for substantial exports. Consumers' and dealers' stocks at the end of September were reported as about 13,100 flasks compared with 12,900 flasks on hand at the end of August. This would be equivalent to over six months' domestic requirements.

Companies that were responsible for 98% of Oregon's total in 1939 reported that the August total was 121% higher than the monthly average for 1939 and 2% below the August production, which was 14% above the July output. According to Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Consumers there were no imports of mercury for consumption in August and September. Exports totaled 799 flasks in September compared to 633 flasks in August. Of the September exports, 42 flasks went to Canada; 646 to the United Kingdom; 38 to Colombia, and 26 to Australia. Domestic production increased from 1800 flasks in January to 3600 flasks in September. Domestic consumption was as follows:

January, 1940	2,300 flasks
February, 1940	2,000 flasks
March, 1940	1,800 flasks
April, 1940	1,900 flasks
May, 1940	2,100 flasks
June, 1940	2,400 flasks
July, 1940	2,200 flasks
August, 1940	2,100 flasks
September, 1940	2,100 flasks

Consumers' and dealers' stocks in January 1940 amounted to 13,000 flasks. In September the figure was 13,100 flasks. Producers' stocks were 582 flasks in January and 377 flasks at the end of September.

The above statistics showing excess production over domestic consumption, are reflected in market quotations for quicksilver—prices have continually softened. About August first, market price was $188-$190 a flask. At the end of the month, quotations were $183-$185. Present market quotation at the beginning of November is slightly under $170 a flask.—(The Ore Bin.)

THINGS TO WATCH FOR

A snore-preventer — a rubber ball that clips to the back of your pajamas and whistles when you roll over on your back—and on it! . . . A "last word" in fountain-pen desk sets—it combines a double pen-holder with a matching fluorescent lamp and a built-in clock, and will be offered specially for the holiday trade. . . . Watch for the patriotic motif in almost everything in the novelty line nowadays — such as stars-and-stripes glassware; red, white and blue scarves with historic scenes printed thereon, such as Washington crossing the Delaware; and perfume bottles in the form of a bugle, with red, white and blue trappings. . . . Here's a lulu "bundling gloves" — they come three to a set. "She" wears one, "he" wears another, and the third one is built to accommodate the "other" hand of each of them. For lovebirds who have to hold hands even at football games. . . . An automobile service-station lift, for jacking cars up for greasing, in which the car rides up, on even keel, on a 45-degree angle frame (doesn't take so much lifting power as the straight vertical hoist).

HYBRID CORN GAINING IN OREGON.

Approximately 12 per cent of Oregon field corn grown in 1940 was from hybrid seed, reports Dr. R. E. Fore in a new OSC extension circular entitled "Hybrid Corn in Oregon." The circular lists 13 Oregon producers of hybrid seed for certification. Dr. Fore believes that the percentage in this state will be doubled next year judging by the speed with which the hybrids have been adopted in the corn belt. This year nine out of every 10 acres in Iowa was planted with hybrid seed. Warning is given never to save seed from a hybrid crop no matter how good the ears are, because the variety "breaks up" in the second generation.
