

Ghosts Of Old-Time Wild West Take Revenge On Auto Tourists

Mr. and Mrs. Jack Star, who nearly lost lives in midnight adventure in Texas plains country.

ADD to the unusual adventures that auto tourists encounter, the thriller that Mr. and Mrs. Jack Star, young Los Angeles couple, have lived through.

Star and his wife, driving from Chicago to California, were crossing the Texas Panhandle country. To escape the heat, they travelled at night. They had left Amarillo for Tucumcari, New Mexico.

Star drove and his wife dozed in the back seat. The road was straight, level and deserted. Star made himself comfortable and was sitting back, rolling along at about 65 miles an hour.

"Something loomed indistinctly in the distance," he said. "Whatever it was took up the best part of the road. I couldn't even tell whether it was going away from me or not."

"Then I saw what it was. Directly ahead, filling the road, was a herd of wild horses. I mumbled the brakes—the jerk almost jolted my head off and threw my wife against the front seat."

"In the next second we were among them. The car careened off the flank of the nearest bewildered animal. It collided with another—we would have turned over if it hadn't.

"The two I hit reared and lunged straight at the car. They landed on the hood, shattered the windshield. Others whirled and closed in, lunging and kicking at wheels and fenders.

"While I was ducking hooves, my wife scrambled over into the front seat. She pulled my flashlight out of the compartment and switched it on. The frightened beasts, partially blinded, milled about the car. For a full minute they gathered themselves for the new attack. Then, quite suddenly, they left the roadway, snorting, panting and grunting.

"We just sat there and wondered if it really was all over. Our flashlight batteries were more than a year old, but they were fresh when they were put in. We think they saved our lives."

The battered car was stalled almost crosswise in the middle of Route 66, without lights. The pair set to work with the flashlight, changed a tire, connected wires ripped out of the ignition system, and got to the next town.

HOW TO BEAT A SKID.

Race drivers have three cardinal rules when their cars go into a skid and the rules might well be memorized by all motorists, according to Pontiac engineers. They are: don't touch the brakes, leave the car in gear, turn the front wheels with the skid not against it.

Always a Dust Bowl
In his intensely interesting book "The Empire of Dust" Lawrence Svoboda says: "History reveals that early caravans that crossed this territory (the Dust Bowl) a hundred years ago sometimes encountered dust storms during which visibility was reduced to as low as 100 yards . . . depressions were blown out . . . and today they form sloughs and lagoons. Ten to fifty of them can be observed in ten miles of travel. They are commonly called buffalo wallows, from an erroneous belief . . . that they were trampled out by huge herds of bison. So the Dust Bowl has always been there."

Women Just as Cool
Contrary to general opinion, women are just as cool in an emergency as men, says one authority. According to this authority, men are perhaps cooler during the first moments of a disaster, but after the first excitement is over, they have proved to be just as cool-headed as men.

1940's Biggest Lie

The 1940 prize whopper given annually by the Burlington Liar's club was awarded Howard Amberson of Three Forks, Montana, for the traditional New Year's meeting. The prize story was adjudged the best of 6,000 and followed:

"We were herding stock from the range to the valley ranch for the winter when it turned terribly cold. This meant extra help. So I hired a young fellow, new to the country.

"The first day he complained of his feet getting cold. We told him of an old-established practice here on the range. Instead of wearing overshoes or socks, we sprinkled a little red pepper in our boots.

"He consulted the cook and we started out. Before long he was kicking his feet against the stirrups. Then he dismounted and walked. Soon he struck out in one of those stomping dog-trots.

"He said that he figured if red pepper was good, chili powder ought to be better.

"Friction of the chili powder against the ball of his foot, as he rode, had heated things up inside those boots till it had cooked his bunions, popped his corn—and the only reason his toes weren't hurt was because they had hung themselves on the nails."

National Defense
Total appropriations for national defense, including maintenance of service departments, in the Roosevelt administration were more than $7,000,000,000 in the fiscal years 1933-34 through 1939-40, exclusive of the new funds asked by the President on May 16 and pending bills for 1940-41.
